Mary Leahy, "but I think it's for a good cause." She said the walk suggests to participants how far some people in other countries must travel just to get water.

First-time walker Charlene Layne, another Elon senior, said, "I walked because I wanted to do something for somebody else. None of us had to do this."

Freshman Chris Ritter said he walked "to make an awareness that there's a problem with hunger in the world and to raise money for a good cause."

Another freshman, Laura Keller, said, "I think it's great that such little effort by so few can do so much for so many."

The goal of the county CROP walk was $125,000. Officials said they could not give the exact amount of pledges, because some walkers had signed up more sponsors that could be recorded in the 10 spaces on their sponsor cards.

Last year Dr. Allen Tate of Burlington received $3,500 in pledges and said he hoped "to double that" in 1986.

The 1985 CROP Walk raised $103,000, and officials were confident that this year's pledges would exceed that total.

The money will go to Church World Services to be used in Alamance County and in Africa. Twenty percent of the money will be used to purchase food, and the remainder will buy tents and other necessities at relief shelters.

Long also said that reaching the county goal of $1,075,000 is off to a happy fair start. She said the report date for the county will be at the end of this week. "We are not sure yet how much we already have, but it should be somewhere around $200,000."

ROTC scholarships awarded

Elon's ROTC Cadet Corps has received a record 24 national scholarships this fall.

This scholarship pays for all of the student's expenses and provides $100 each month for spending money.

Last spring, 13 ROTC members applied for the 12,000 scholarships offered.

Applicants were interviewed by a board of Elon faculty members and a senior scholarship recipient. Recommendations of this board were then sent to a national committee for final selection.

Eleven of the 13 applicants from Elon were awarded this prestigious scholarship.

Captain Mark T. Bowers, officer in charge of ROTC, attributes the high number of Elon recipients to the support and cooperation of the faculty and to the successful efforts of his staff in attracting students competitive in academic and leadership qualities.
