John McCutcheon

Grammy nominee to perform

John McCutcheon is more than a one-man folk festival. He is perhaps the most energetic, versatile and talented figure in American traditional music today, and audiences love him.

He will be in concert at the Elon College Fine Arts Theatre on Wednesday, September 14 at 8:00 p.m. Tickets are $5.00 and will go on sale August 24 at the Fine Arts Building office.

McCutcheon has been called "Virginia's rustic renaissance man," ranging from instrumentalist, singer-songwriter, folklorist, and recording artist, to activist, storyteller and teacher. Yet none of those descriptions really tell the story of what happens when McCutcheon performs.

At one moment he is sawing away on a mournful fiddle, recalling the broken hearts of back country tales; in the next he has his audience spellbound with the often unfamiliar, but unmistakable sound of the hammer dulcimer.

Acclaimed as the finest hammer dulcimer player in the world, he brings to life this old mountain instrument with beauty and clarity that leave the audience clamoring for more.

No matter what his instrument, the power and virtuosity he brings to it make his performances unforgettable. With ten albums to his credit, including a Grammy nomination and a "Children's Album of the Year," his popularity keeps growing as he brings traditional American folk music into concert halls all over the world.
