It was a storm Blizzard of Bucks hits Whitley Auditorium

The Blizzard of The Bucks Game Show blew into Whitley Auditorium last Friday. Approximately 80-100 students attended the event with hopes of taking home a bundle of cash.

Shondra McMullen was the big winner. She outperformed 12 fellow students to earn $170.

The show was organized where three different rounds of competition produced qualifiers for the final round. Four people were randomly selected from the audience to compete in each qualifying round. The winners of the qualifying rounds won $25.

The first qualifier was won by Becky Milton. She survived three elimination races. The second race required the competitors to carry a balloon between their legs. In the third race, participants were required to catch two bouncing balls in the brim of the sombrero that they were wearing.

Mark Wheeler won the second qualifier. In the first race of this qualifier, the first three competitors to pop a balloon advanced. In the second race, the first two competitors to eat a marshmallow tied on the end of a string advanced. Wheeler became a final round qualifier when he won a race that required him to transport five ping pong balls from one basket to another with a spoon.

The third qualifier was won by Shondra McMullen. The rules of the first race stated that the contestants had to drink orange juice out of a baby bottle without squeezing the container while wearing a baby bonnet. After they finished the bottle, they had to say, "Ga-Ga Goo-Goo."

required participants to see how many marshmallows they could put in their mouths and still say, "Chubby Bunny." The last two candidates for the final round then competed in a dressing contest that required them to put on disco outfits from the 1970's.

In the first competition of the final round, Wheeler, McMullen and Milton competed to see who would be the first two people to stack 15 wooden blocks into a free-standing pyramid. Wheeler was eliminated in this part of the competition.

The final two competitors had to dig through a pie tray of whipped cream to find a piece a bubble gum. McMullen defeated Milton in the contest by being the first person to unwrap the gum and blow a bubble.

As a reward for winning, McMullen was given the opportunity to enter a closed glass funnel for 30 seconds and grab as many dollar bills as she could carry.

"I tried to use both of my hands to get the money as it was flying by. It was tough to do that because I had a bag in between my knees that I was trying to put the money in," McMullen said. "I felt like I could not get enough money in my hands."

McMullen ended up with $145. That, coupled with her earlier winnings, allowed her to win $170 for one night's work.

Mallarme Chamber Players blend unique sounds

Tonya R. Taylor
The Pendulum

The Mallarme Chamber Players will blend their unique sounds of the flute, viola and harp in a performance at Yeager Recital Hall Oct. 24 at 8 p.m.

This program is part of the college's Classical Soiree Series.

The group, whose name was inspired by the French symbolist poet Stephane Mallarme, performs a repertoire of music from every century.

The Mallarme Chamber Players include: violist, Jonathan Bagg; harpist, Jacquelyn Bartlett, and flutist, Anna Ludwig Wilson.

Bagg is a Duke University faculty member and a violist for the Ciompi Quartet. Bartlett is an established harpist who has performed with many distinguished conductors. Wilson is the artistic director and founder of Mallarme, and has an extensive musical and theatre background.

The Mallarme Chamber Players is a non-profit organization. Their performance is jointly supported by a grant from the North Carolina Arts Council and the National Endowment for the Arts in Washington, D.C.

The performance is free and open to the public.
