

The presidential race comes to Elon

As the 1992 presidential campaign is winding down and election day is just around the corner, the presidential candidates have been making last efforts to attract voters.

For both President Bush and presidential hopeful Bill Clinton, votes from southern states are important ones, thus the recent rush of visits to North Carolina. Both Bush and Clinton have traveled the state hitting handfuls of cities per day.

Burlington was one of many scheduled stops for President Bush during his whistle-stop tour last week.

Elon College was a more spontaneous stop for Clinton, already stopping in cities close to the north and south of the college town.

This week's Pendulum spotlights the upcoming election, the recent visits by Bush and Clinton and how members of the college community view each of the candidates.

What follows are summaries of this week's stories and where to find them.

✓ Many Elon students and faculty traveled the short distance to downtown Burlington or out to the train tracks in front of the college to catch a glimpse of President Bush on his campaign tour. To find out reactions to his visit, see story page 9.

✓ A counterpoint by the presidents of the College Democrats and the College Republicans as to which candidate you should vote for in the upcoming election. See stories on pages 10 and 11.

✓ Some of Elon's students may be in London for the semester, but they continue to keep up with current political events in this country. Find out who they would have voted for and who they think will be the next President of the United States. See story page 11.

✓ A last minute look at the issues the candidates support and don't support. Also see what they have in store for the country if they were to be elected president. See story page 13.

✓ The College Democrats and the College Republicans face off in mock presidential debate. See story page 19.

✓ A roundtable discussion between The Pendulum and Elon students about the election. See story page 17.

✓ The Student Government Association and The Pendulum sponsored a mock election to see how Elon students will be voting. To find out the results of the election, see page 19.
