"I haven't heard any complaints from Officer Woznick or any other officer about our decisions about rape cases and prosecutions," Balog said. "The impression I have is that they have agreed with our analysis...that there are sufficient problems that a particular case cannot be prosecuted."

"I don't have to have a case that I am guaranteed to win," Balog said. "I don't have to have a case where I am guaranteed to get a conviction. I do have to have something that will reasonably say, 'There is some expectation that this will be successful.'"

When asked what he would say to rape victims about the lack of arrests in on-campus cases, Balog replied:

"It is my impression that they (the Rape Crisis Alliance) are conducting seminars to educate young women about problems, dangerous situations that they find themselves in."

"My first recommendation would be that they (women) need to pay attention to some of that training. There are situations that they are placing themselves in, and ways they are handling it, that make it difficult to impossible for us to prosecute a rape," Balog said.

Balog used a hypothetical situation in which a woman and man are in one room and other people are in an adjacent room.

"Mary has got to do something to stop that incident from going beyond where she wants it to be," Balog said.

"She needs to be just as aggressive in protecting herself as John is aggressive in pushing her, talking her into, and ultimately, forcing her to do something that she later says is against her will," Balog said.

Asked if a man lying atop a woman and attacking her would hinder her aggressiveness, Balog said:

"I think it would be a hinderance from some physical aggressiveness, but it is not a hinderance from screaming rape."

Men also should know there are limits on their behavior, Balog said.

"He can ask her for sex. He can be romantic. He can be persuasive, but there's a limit to what he's supposed to do. Holding her down and forcing her to have sex is way beyond where he is supposed to be as an aggressive, hormone-driven, young man. He needs to know the dangers that his behavior is going to get him into."

"We very much want to get on a white horse and help solve the problem of young women being forced into sexual acts to which they don't consent, but we have to do it realistically," Balog said.
