Vice President candidates to be announced Friday

Amy Logerwell

The Academic Vice President Search Committee is narrowing down candidates for the vacant position and hopes to release the names at the faculty meeting Friday, Provost Gerald Francis said Tuesday.

The position was opened last April when Francis, former vice president, was promoted to provost of Elon College.

Clair Myers, dean of Academic Affairs, has been acting as interim vice president while a national search has been conducted.

The finalists will come to Elon's campus sometime between March 9 and 24, said Jean Schwind, English professor and committee member.

Francis said more than 100 applications were accepted.

The committee, which included faculty and staff, began the search in September.

"This is an extremely important job to fill so the search has been thorough," Schwind said.

Feb. 19 and 20, the committee interviewed six candidates at the Piedmont-Triad International Airport, Schwind said.

She said the committee hopes to have three or four candidates to choose from.

The candidates will be interviewed by faculty and staff of different departments on campus.

President Fred Young will make the final decision.

Francis, chairman of the committee, Tuesday declined to give specifics about the candidates until Friday. He also told the other committee members not to discuss the candidates publicly.

The other ten members of the committee are Thomas Henricks, Janie Brown, Don Grady, Nancy Harris, William Hightower, Smith Jackson, Terri Kirchen, Calvert "Buck" McGregor, Mike Sanford, and Schwind.

Former student involved in fatal car accident

Former Elon student Floyd Barrett of Windsor, N.C., died Friday after being in an automobile accident last Thursday.

Barrett, who would have been a senior this year, was a student at Elon from the fall of 1991 through the summer of 1994. However, school officials wouldn't give information as to why he left the college.

The Windsor Police Department and Highway Patrol did not return phone calls Tuesday night.

A memorial service for Barrett will be held at the Elon College Community Church at 9:15 a.m. Friday.

While at Elon, Barrett was involved with several student activities.

He was the "guiding force" behind Elon's College Bowl Team defeat of Duke University a couple of years ago.

"Duke didn't easily recover from that," said Chalmers Brumbaugh, assistant professor of political science and College Bowl adviser.

Barrett was a member of the College Bowl for two years.

"When he was on, he was a real good player," Brumbaugh said about Floyd. "He knew an awful lot of information. I'm not sure where he got it from, but he could bring it up quickly. He was quite a player."

The political science/public administration major was also a member of the Honors Program, as well as being involved in the North Carolina Student Legislature, the

His first year at Elon, Barrett served as president of the Black Cultural Society and as a SGA senator. Barrett was in the SGA for two years. Last spring, he ran unsuccessfully for SGA president.

Professors say constitution doesn't include individuals

SGA's proposed constitution is weighted heavily in favor of organizations rather than individual students, said two political science professors.

"It doesn't include everybody. The people left out will be upset," Laura Helvey, assistant professor of political science, said last week.

SGA senators tonight will continue picking apart proposed changes to its constitution.

Last week, SGA senators spent three hours revising about one and a half pages of the eight page document.

Student Government Association officials had hoped to revise the constitution last Thursday and ratify it tonight.

SGA President Larry Williams said senators probably will ratify the proposed constitution next Thursday and send it to the student body for a vote March 13 and 14.

A forum for students to ask questions and comment on the proposed constitution was scheduled for last night.

Under the proposal, the SGA Senate would consist of an Academic Council, an Organization Council and an At Large Council.

The At Large Council, representing the academic classes, would have 12 senators. The Organization Council would have 14 senators. The Academic Council, representing academic majors, would have eight.
