Senator impeachment pending

Stacey Ward
Staff Reporter

Sophomore Senator Chad Bebout has been charged with failure to comply with his student government duties, which may result in impeachment.

Charges include failure to attend SGA and class meetings.

According to the SGA constitution, the judicial committee has three options: to impeach Bebout, to refer the decision to the SGA senate, or to keep him in office.

Sophomore class senators formally presented the charges at Thursday's meeting.

"I think it's a good thing for student government. We're not putting up with people not showing up. We're willing to work this year," SGA President Michael Rodgers said.

Bebout did not return calls to The Pendulum Monday and Tuesday nights.

"We wanted to set a precedent. We want to get things done, a weak link will bring us down," Draper said.

A judicial hearing is tentatively scheduled for Nov. 8, depending on the availability of Bebout and judicial committee members.

Bebout will face a closed hearing led by the judicial committee.

"He deserves to be given another chance. We need to make him understand that everyone else's priorities are with student government," Belardi said.

Bebout will have the opportunity to choose a representative from the SGA senate on his behalf, said Judicial Committee Chair Brian Corrado. If Bebout's representative is chosen from the judicial committee there will be only four members, Corrado said.

The committee members are Daniel Haithcox, Iris Boutros, Vinnie Vaccarezza, Eric Cone, Jennifer Neblett, and Corrado.

Five committee members will be chosen to serve as impeachment hearing members.

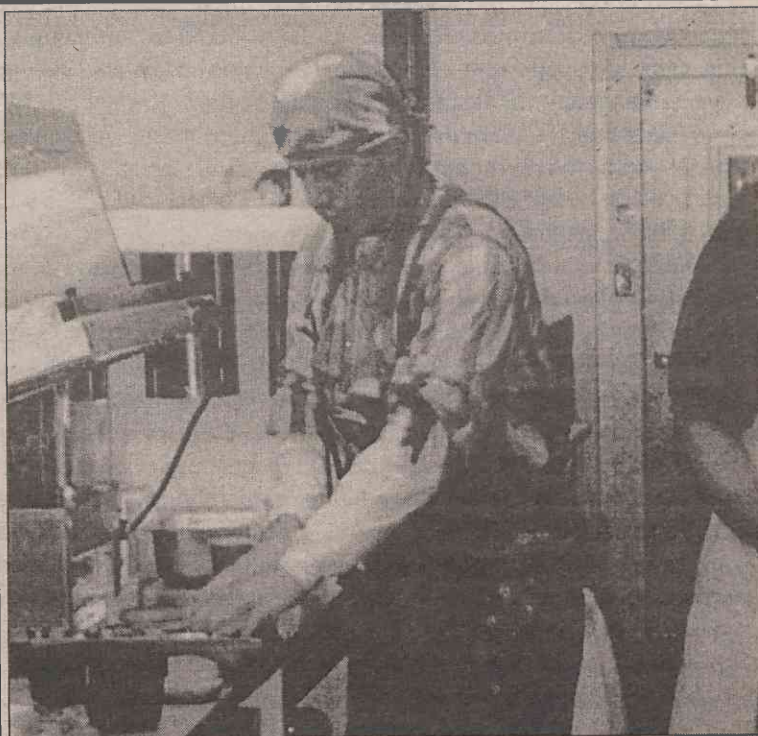

A member of the sophomore class must be present to charge Bebout at the hearing, Draper said.

If possible in the spring, the sophomore class is considering amending the constitution's impeachment law, Draper said.

Bebout was hand-delivered a letter stating the charges against him. He was present at Thursday's meeting.

The senate questioned Bebout and he rebutted for ten minutes.

Symposium addresses humanity question

Jeff Wirick
Staff Reporter

The 1995 Fall Symposium, which addresses the question "How do different career fields view humanity," ends its two days of discussions with speakers from Wake Forest and Transylvania Universities today in Moseley 215.

"The function of a symposium is to draw together a group of people to look at one issue or question from different directions," said economics professor Jim Barbour.

Chaplain Richard McBride came up with the topic for this year's symposium from an article in a Wake Forest magazine about how economists view human beings. The author of the article, Donald Frey Ph.D., an economics professor from Wake Forest University, will speak today in Moseley 215 at 9:50 a.m.

"I wondered how all of those years of training for a particular field prepare you to see human beings and what does it cause you to look for," McBride said.

Moseley 215 was chosen as the site for the symposium to accommodate 75 to 100 spectators.

The other visiting professor, Dorothy Neff, a sociologist from Transylvania University, will speak today at 1:30 p.m.

"We want to get together as many of the different presenters as possible and evaluate what we have learned," Barbour said. He hopes to carry the question into the spring Student Undergraduate Research Forum (SURF).

This forum could publish research on this topic if the question is addressed at future symposiums, Barbour said. He hopes to open the humanity question next year to departments that did not participate in this year's event.

"This is one of the fundamental questions of humanity," Barbour said. "These are the questions children ask, but as adults, we get caught up in urgent questions, such as how am I going to feed my family. This (symposium) gives us a chance to address an important question."

Along with the visiting speakers, Philosophy Professor Anthony Weston and Economics Professor Greg Lilly will speak today at 9:50 a.m. and 1:30 p.m.

Assisting Lilly today are students Cary Wolfe and Randy Jolley. Student Chris Harshman will assist Weston.

"We are going to talk about our self interests from the standpoint of economics majors and compare them to students who have a different discipline," Jolley said.

Jolley and Wolfe will talk about an experiment dealing with human nature and economics.

The symposium will officially end after the final round table wrap-up session today at 3:20 p.m.

Students volunteer time for Special Olympics this Friday

More than 70 Elon students are volunteering their time at the Alamance County Special Olympics bowling tournament Friday Nov. 3.

The volunteers come from a variety of campus organizations including Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship and most of the greek organizations.

Mary Beth Jones, the Elon Volunteers! coordinator for the event, said the organizations that provided most of the volunteers are the Alpha Xi Delta and Alpha Sigma Alpha sororities.

"I think everyone that volunteers is doing a special service....All of the years that I've been involved everyone has come together and done a good job," said Jones, who has been involved with the program for four years.

More than 250 athletes are expected at the bowling tournament, which is being held at the Country Club Lanes in Burlington. The athletes range in age from eight to 85.

The day will begin with the ceremonial lighting of the torch. In the morning the children will bowl. Their activity will end with a pizza party. The adults will bowl in the afternoon and their activity will end with the serving of an early dinner.

All participants will receive a ribbon and the top three participants in each age division will receive a medal.

This is the 27th year for the bowling tournament, which is being sponsored by the recreation departments of Alamance County and Burlington.

Shuttle vans for Elon students who wish to volunteer will leave from the Moseley Center parking lot at 8 a.m., 10 a.m., noon, and 3 p.m. for anyone who needs transportation.
