Elon examines moving health services

Lisa McChristian

The Pendulum

Elon College has made plans to demolish the student Health Services building, which is currently located next to the new library and the science building. The demolition may take affect this summer. No reason has been given for the change.

There are no specific plans on where Health Services would be moved. Elon is having a difficult time finding a location. Previous ideas have been to renovate the existing building or use a space in Moseley. One idea was to put the department in the old Winn-Dixie behind the local Pizza Hut. That would make Health Services about a half a mile west of campus.

Dr. Ellington feels that a "good health room setup is vital to a college." He feels that the current location is "warm and inviting...convenient," and "where a health organization should be." In several emergency calls nurses have had to run to the dorms to help students. Many students are just walking by the building and stop by to have something checked out early. The move may discourage students from coming in early and they will wait until their symptoms are much more severe. Students with intestinal problems or physi-

SGA fills remaining vacant positions

The Pendulum

The Student Government Association (SGA) appointed three students to vacant Senate positions at the Oct. 29 meeting.

Senior Colleen Crotty, junior Dennis Burlew and freshman Travis Suber were voted into office after speaking on their behalf at the meeting.

Crotty assumed the office of senior class secretary/treasurer, a position left open after the impeachment of Senior Class President Emily Matesic.

Senior Class Vice-president Angela Olsen accepted the office of president Oct. 1. Senior Class Secretary/Treasurer Jenn Wright moved up to vice-president, leaving the secretary/treasurer seat vacant.

Crotty's appointment passed with a unanimous vote.

Her goals are to serve in the position in the best way she can and to be open and fair.

"I'm an active member of my sorority, I'm an active community member and I volunteer," Crotty said.

"I've been a leader in these positions and I think if I'm a leader, maybe I can inspire others to lead as well."

Some of her new duties include serving as a support unit to the Homecoming Committee, helping to plan the new Elon 401 transition class and working with the budget committee, activities to which she looks forward.

"She sounds very dedicated, which is important with such a time-consuming position," SGA Executive President Mark Richter said.

Burlew and Suber took the two open spots as representatives to the social sciences department.

"I think both will be very active in the Academic Council," Richter said.

"They work with the Academic Council, its liaison Matt Syno and Julianne Maher to address the academic needs of Elon students."

Burlew, a sociology and human services double major, hopes to be a voice for his department.

these organizations are having activities and current students are welcome.

"We are encouraging students to go. If they are in a particular organization, it can be very interesting to meet people that used to be in your organization," said Amy Wile, assistant director of alumni and parent relations.
