"Dr. Cannon's generous gift will make it possible for us to prepare our students to thrive in a global environment."

Cannon credits President Lambert with the idea of the endowment. "Dr. Lambert is the one who had the vision to establish (the endowment for the International Program)."

"Our world is more intimately involved in our lives that what it was 20 or 30 years ago," Cannon said.

"There is a real impetus for us to know about people in other lands and for them to know us. This exciting center will make that possible. I am thrilled and excited about this center, which can do so much in allowing Elon students to experience other lands and people."

While the endowment will serve to help fund the international programs for years to come, it will also help students currently in need.

"There will be scholarships for students who can't afford to come to help them come (on study abroad experiences)."

Cannon has already made a lasting contribution to the college, as her endowment to the Isabella Cannon Leadership Program continues to teach students how to be responsible leaders on both a local and global scale well into the 21st century.

"Dr. Cannon has committed her life to civic responsibility and that if students can understand not just to act locally, as important as that is, but also to act globally. She endowed the Isabella Cannon Leadership Program here on campus so that people will understand how to act locally and how to act globally," said Assistant Dean of Students John Barnhill.

"I think that Dr. Cannon is somebody that has inspired our students that are a part of that program. She comes every fall and she talks to the new Emerging Leaders and says that this is something that is very important to the college, leadership as a whole."

Several residence halls volunteered at the Elon College fire station, while fraternities and sororities participated in highway clean-ups and fundraisers for their respective philanthropies.

Students also volunteered at the Carousel Festival in the Burlington City Park.

The concert, co-sponsored by the Student Union Board and SGA, brought students back to campus to enjoy music, food and a beverage garden.

"I was pleased with the event," John Gardner said. "Everyone was dancing, screaming and having fun, but it was all kept under control"

Security was on hand to control the crowds around the stage and to monitor entrance to the beverage garden, however no problems were reported.

"Personally, I loved the concert," John Gardner said. "When Montgomery Burns Band started and I looked behind me and saw hundreds of people, I knew this was big. It was a perfect day."

Current plans are to keep Elon Service Day as a yearly event with campus-wide participation, much like that of National Make-A-Difference Day on Oct. 23.

"Next year I'd like to host the same event, but on a larger scale," John Gardner said. "I want to reach out to more members of the community as well as more students."

Nominations Are Open

Each year a national publication, Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges, solicits names of juniors, seniors and graduate students to be nominated by their colleges on the basis of outstanding scholastic, service and leadership performance.

Nominees who are accepted by Who's Who will be listed in the national Who's Who directory, receive an award certificate and be recognized locally and in their hometown newspaper. Students often include the recognition by Who's Who in their resume when searching for employment.

Juniors, seniors and graduate students with at least a 2.5 GPA are eligible for this award and can nominate themselves by completing an application form available in Alamance 120. As specified on the form, students must submit a cover letter indicating their interest in being considered and a resume. Letters of recommendation from faculty are allowed, but not required. The deadline for submitting completed application materials is October 15, 1999.

A committee of Elon College students, faculty and Student Life staff will review applications and make nominations.
