Life does exist outside of Elon: Breaking through the university bubble

Andi Petrini
A&E Editor

The town of Elon surrounds the university's campus. The campus occupies more than 500 acres at its center, and the population of 6,738, according to the 2000 census, expands more each year, much like the institution's.

The most recent construction in the town is the ongoing construction of the N.C. Highway 87 bypass, which will connect Highway 87 to Cook Road, cross Westbrook Avenue and U.S. 70, where there will eventually be an exit off Interstate 85/40 when completed.

For more than 100 years, the town and the school shared the name Elon College. When Elon became a university in 2001, the town dropped college from its name.

With the expansion of the university's campus, the town is expanding also to provide services to its residents, with property being annexed in the north and west sections of the town.

Elon is governed by a six-member board of aldermen: mayor Beth Schmidt, mayor pro tem Richard Keziah, Phoebe Harrison, Lawrence Slade, Ronald Klepcyk and Ed Swing. Town manager Mike Dula and clerk Sabrina Oliver complete the governing body.

The board recently approved the rezoning and conditional-use permit for 210 Lawrence St., which sits off of Haggard Avenue across from Danieley Center, for the construction of apartment buildings that can be rented to students and staff.

The town and the university have recently entered an agreement to construct two new entrance signs for the town. The university will pick up $8,000 of the signs' $16,000 price tag.
