Davis named law school dean

Brittany Smith
News Editor

University President Leo Lambert announced Tuesday at a press conference in Greensboro that Leary Davis will be the founding dean of the new law school.

Davis served as a consultant for Elon's School of Law Feasibility Study Committee beginning in 2002 and conducted extensive research, writing the report on the committee's findings. "We gained great respect for his extensive knowledge of the legal profession,

University charges senior with peeping

Says student may have used digital video to spy on women

Jessica Patchett
Editor Emeritus

Jeffrey Heyer, senior and formerly an active member of the Elon University community, now faces criminal charges of using hidden cameras to videotape unsuspecting female students.

Elon Campus Safety and Police arrested Heyer Wednesday on one charge of peeping, a felony offense, though campus officials say there may be numerous women who pursue further legal action.

University judiciary proceedings began Tuesday, and following Heyer's arrest, Student Life officials asked Heyer to withdraw from campus activity until legal proceedings are settled.

Criminal complaints were filed three days after a female student found a secret camera hidden in a clock she received from Heyer. Suspicious of Heyer's intentions, the student brought the camera to Campus Safety and Police. Officials confirmed the presence of video recording devices and seized the clock radio, valued at $795.

New meal plans effective next semester

Maggie Griffiths
Reporter

Elon's student meal plan will be undergoing drastic changes beginning next fall.

The new plan offers students the option of purchasing five, nine, 11, 14, 17 or 19 meals per week. These meals can be purchased at any time, as the block plan has been completely eliminated. Students hosting guests will therefore be able to swipe their Phoenix cards multiple times in one location. Finally, if a student does not purchase all of his or her meals in a given week, the remaining meals will carry over to the next week until the end of the semester.

Since this new meal plan is extremely flexible, there is no longer a need for the unlimited meal plan.

Freshmen will be required to have the 11-meal plan or higher. Sophomores, juniors and seniors living in Elon's residence halls must purchase a minimum of a 9-meal plan. Sophomores living in apartments as well as juniors and seniors living in the Loy Center or Academic Village are required to have at least a five-meal plan. Juniors and seniors living in apartments are not required to purchase a meal plan.

ARAMARK met with various student groups such as Student Government Association and Resident Student Association in order to gain valuable insight about what changes would most benefit Elon students.

"We were dealing with a two-fold issue: value perception and flexibility," said Jeff Gazda, ARAMARK's resident district manager. Elon students seemed unsatisfied with the fact that predetermined meal times, or "blocks" ultimately control their meal plan.

"The time allotments for each meal are ridiculous," freshman Shawn Tobin said. "When I have classes from 12-3:45 p.m., I run to a dining hall because if I don't make
