

True Life: Couple's wedding filmed for really TV

They suffered so others didn't have to.

Perhaps one of the most striking stories came from Abubacar Sultan, performed by junior Zach Jordan. Sultan's tale shared the experience of a particular child in Mozambique, a victim of war.

After days of emotional instability, the little boy finally shared his story with Sultan. He had been awoken in the middle of the night by soldiers and forced to set fire to his own home, where his family slept. As they tried to escape, they were shot and dismembered in front of the little boy's eyes.

If it weren't for the conviction of the student performers and their passion for human rights, this performance may not have been nearly as effective. They found the courage to give voices to the people who inspire them and cannot speak for themselves.

Updated March 17, 2010

"I knew that was the only way for me to really stand up for what I believe in. Coleman was my friend and after realizing the situation he'd created, I knew that I wanted to grow old with him."

Taylor proposed March 17, 2009. He presented Coleman with a ring which had a picture of a ring at the top.

"I screamed and said, 'No! I don't believe he was asking me to marry him when I looked at that ring!'"

In December, Coleman began communicating with the reality television show on MTV. She had first heard about the show from a friend who is a film producer, who told her that the show was looking for a couple for their upcoming show "True Life: In a New Year".

Coleman's initial communication with the producer was minimal. But in February, the crew spent a few days filming Taylor in Mozambique, and then came to Vegas to film Coleman.

The crew spent the morning, Taylor's wedding, the bridal shower and Coleman's pouring in preparation for her move to Hollywood. They conducted an interview with Coleman about being a reality star.

"I was a little nervous about the thought of being on the biggest stage of my life broadcasted for all the world to see," Coleman said.

Taylor was excited about the show because he felt they had a unique story to share with other couples.

"True Life" was not a typical love story. Coleman said, meaning that Taylor and Coleman have not been together or had sex before marriage.

"They were really interested in finding us out our relationship to help us for those reasons," Coleman said.