Summer School Offers Variety

FAYETTEVILLE - For the first time, Fayetteville State University will offer over a dozen two-week short term courses from Computer Science to Photography.

The announcement was made by Dr. H. M. Eldridge, Director of Summer School at Fayetteville State University.

In addition to the new and innovative courses being offered, there will be courses designed to meet the needs of in-service teachers and the community at large, Dr. Eldridge said.

The Director of Summer School said that the short term courses will begin June 17th and continue through June 28th. The following courses offered in this time period are: Foundation of Education, Principles of Guidance, and a Drug Seminar for Elementary and Secondary School Teachers.

Beginning June 24th and continuing through July 6th, the second two-week period, the following courses will be offered: Photography; July 1-12 (Introduction to Computer Science); Curriculum Methods & Materials in Early Childhood Education, Afro-American Music and Creative Art Expressions for Young Children, July 15-26 (Ceramics and Humanities).

The first session of summer school ends June 21st while the second session starts June 24th and continues through July 26th.

For further information contact: The Director of Admissions, Fayetteville State University, Fayetteville, North Carolina.
