

ANNUAL CLAY ORATORICAL CONTEST

bilities of the aeroplane as a commercial carrier as well as a fighting machine were predicted.

The third number of the evening, "The Fall and Rise of a Nation," a plea for the infant democracy of Russia, was given by J. C. Newlin. Mr. Newlin sketched the conditions which surrounded the birth of the new republic, and urged her official recognition by the allied nations.

On the oration, "The Waste of War and the Wealth of Peace," by Edward L. Hallady, a contrast was made between the expenditures for war and civil administration. Mr. Hallady made a plea for the reduction of armaments and the use of the savings thereby gained for the purpose of peace.

The last oration was delivered by H. G. McBane. "Heroes Unsung," a tribute to the men of science. The admirable work of these men in scientific research was accentuated and a higher appreciation of their achievements stimulated.

While the judges were reaching a decision a vocal solo, "Tommy Lad," was given by N. A. Fox.

The Henry Clay Society was fortunate in securing as judges H. A. Carroll, Kirby C. Bowen and Charles L. Lambeth.

SENIORS IN HOME ECONOMICS PIONEERS IN IMPORTANT MOVEMENT

The Seniors of this year in Home Economics are pioneers in many respects. They are charter members of the Home Economics Department at Guilford, having entered as first year pupils when the work was introduced three years ago; they inaugurated the school-lunch, which was this year of only one week's duration, but which we hope to hear more of in the future; and now they are beginning a movement which may be far reaching in consequences—that of practice teaching, with pupils from the graded school. A short course, covering a period of eight weeks, has been planned by the Seniors as a part of their regular class work, and to each Senior is assigned the teaching of a definite part of the course. A request for pupils from the graded school was courteously responded to by Professor Carroll and as a result eighteen bright, enthusiastic girls have been enrolled from the advanced classes at the graded school. The members of the Senior class doing the teaching are Madge Cable, Mary Cable, Anna Henley and Frances McCracken.

It has been the policy of the Department of Home Economics to have, from time to time, exhibits of work done in the various courses. One of the most interesting of all those given this year was the Laundry exhibit on last Monday afternoon by the class in House work.

Beginning with a microscopical examination of the four fibers from which cloth is made, the observer was carried through the consecutive steps in the laundering of the various fabrics; stains, reagents and methods of removal; soaps of various kinds; blues, with an analysis of the four kinds found on the market; starches, with classification, and characteristics of each. Interesting posters showed modern laundry equipment. Actual work done by the class included silk and cotton waists, sheer white dresses, woolen sweaters and woolen skirts.
