HENRY CLAY

At the meeting of the Henry Clays on May 7th, one of the most spirited and hotly contested debates of the entire year took place. With only two more opportunities remaining in which to display the improvement made in society work, and convince the judges of a developing skill, the men who are in the race for the improvement medal are putting forth some real effort.

The query discussed at this meeting was, Resolved, That aside from the question of expense the small college is preferable to the large college for graduates of high schools.

Holt, Crews and M. Shore, who supported the question, made a staunch and successful plea for the small college in showing that the personal relationship between faculty and students is more pronounced in the smaller institutions, that the individual attention given is greater, and that the chances of a student to participate in the various college activities is greater. In attacking the argument of the affirmative Edward Holladay and J. C. Newlin contended that the greater equipment, and the wider range of courses, together with the larger faculty, offered by the large colleges more than balanced the advantages which the small college offers.

S. Gladstone Hodgkin gave the third number of a series of lectures on debating. This number was devoted to explaining the form in which a debate should be presented, the part which each speaker must take being outlined.

Among the new men who are doing good work and are in line for the improvement medal are Holt, Crews, Merriman, M. Shore and Wolff.

The expiration of the term of service of any good working force is always a source of regret to the community that reaps the benefits of the labor. Such must necessarily be the feeling of the readers of the Guilfordian who now see some of the members of the staff of the college paper leaving the position they have held for one or more years. Under the efficient direction of Donna McBane, and the shrewd business management of D. H. White, the Guilfordian has for the past year been made a creditable college paper. Now the new editorial staff steps in to fill the vacancy made by the retiring staff, and to assume the responsibility of serving the college and its friends.

The task that the new board faces is to reflect the college spirit to those off the campus, to give the friends of the institution an unexaggerated picture of the work of the student body; and to picture the failures of this institution and its needs as well as its successes.

The present board will have made a complete failure unless it leaves the Guilfordian, one year from this time, a better paper than it now is. It has the result of tireless work of former editorial staffs to build on, and these records will be a great incentive to the new staff to edit a Greater Guilfordian.

GUILFORD ATHLETES ENJOY BANQUET AT THE COLLEGE

The retiring athletic cabinet of Guilford College was last night host to the incoming cabinet, the wearers of the "G" and a few of the alumni and old students at a banquet.

At the close of the feast served by the young ladies of the domestic science department, Shields Cameron, president of the retiring cabinet, said a few words of welcome and of the hopes for the future of athletics at Guilford. He introduced Edgar McBane, chairman of the alumni committee on athletics, who acted as toastmaster for the evening. He introduced the other members of the retiring cabinet who told the history of the past year and pledged themselves to the future welfare of athletics at Guilford.

Harry L. Johnson, president of the incoming cabinet, then pledged himself and his cabinet to the future of a greater, grander, Guilford. Other members of the cabinet followed him in the same spirit. Representative wearers of the "G" from each county and state represented then spoke of their plans for Guilford organization and athletics in their respective sections. Coach Doak appropriately closed the speechmaking with a resume of some of the work of the past and plans for the future.
