EDITORIAL

THE QUITTER.

History furnishes many examples of the man who fights his battle for what is in sight for him. He does not invest money unless he can see every dollar coming back with one hundred per cent interest. Such a man is not willing to invest money, or time, in such paying propositions as good roads, good schools and good churches, because he sees no immediate returns coming back into his own pocket. He seems to fear that some other man is getting more of the benefits of this common effort than he is.

A college, made up of young men and women from many different communities, with all its different organizations and activities, is a community in every sense. It usually has every type of individuals that any other community has. It has the students who invest freely in those things which they know will pay dividends, though not immediately; and it has the student who reaches only for that which is directly in front of him. These two types of students are shown more clearly on the athletic field than in any other picture gallery of a college. There is the fellow who has all the appearance of a man, who begins practice with his eye fastened on the college "letter" which a successful season on the varsity team will give him the honor of wearing. He is willing to attend practice every day, swell himself up to his fullest, and do other things to make the coach and the students think that he is a true toiler of the gridiron, and yet behind the curtain, away from public gaze, he smokes his cigarettes and indulges in other light dissipations which his gang takes part in. Then when the season opens up and he retains his position among the scrubs he turns in his suit because he fails to see the chances that he might have the next year, and the foundation that a year's practice gives him. There is also a class of boys who really train and lose the coveted position on the varsity only because there is some one better trained, who has had more experience, who fills the place. One of the best football players that Guilford has had during the past years began practice without a ghost of a chance of winning a letter in sight. Some of the men on the field now, who were laughed at last year are pressing by some of those who laughed at them.

The fellow who has that which goes to make a man never gets discouraged because he sees no dividends coming back directly to him.

The Methodists seem to have sprinkled the Quakers with the wine of defeat before the spirit moved the latter to play real foot ball.

In this issue the "Guilford Ghost" is beginning a series of communications. This one, however, is an expression of sympathy for those who have conscientious objections to subjecting themselves to the powerful influence of the rising sun.

Some students praised the first movie show, while others expressed their disapproval in various literary phases. The originators of this addition to our college life should not feel discouraged for that is only handing down an ancient school custom.

PROF. H. N. BAKER ENTERTAINS FOOTBALL MEN.

On last Friday night Professor H. N. Baker and his table entertained at supper, their representative on the foot ball squad, Everette McBane, and the captain of the team, Algie Newlin.

The supper was given as a slight token of appreciation of what the players had done for Lynchburg, and with the hope that a jolly "send off" would help them to make Trinity follow in Lynchburg's foot-steps. The College colors, crimson and grey, were carried out in the flowers, lamps shades and in the tiny books in which each guest wrote a wish and presented to the two foot ball men.

The fact that it was a "football supper" was emphasized by the foot falls on the place cards, and the unique centerpiece, a miniature football field on which were 22 toy football players, representing two teams just ready for the kick off. The menu which was well suited for football men in both quantity and quality, consisted of: steak, brown gravy, rice, apple sauce, pineapple and tomato sandwiches, fruit salad, fig newtons, cocoa, hot biscuit and butter.

BUSINESS MANAGER HAS COAL SUPPLY READY FOR USE.

Whatever the coal shortage may be during the coming winter Guilford College will not feel the affects of it. Mr. Farlowe, the College Business Manager, purchased the entire winter supply during the past summer. The greater part of this supply has already been heaped about the coal bin near the College power house. About sixteen car loads of coal are now on the college grounds, with only one or two more car loads to be delivered. By placing the order for coal in the early part of the summer, Mr. Farlowe was able to buy it for about one half the present price. This means a saving of several hundred dollars for the college.
