graphs, telephones, and only one single-track railroad. This is a region of long severe winters; the people live in very primitive homes. Their farming implements are the crudest sort; they reap their crops with hand sickles and thresh them with flails.

"In this region a famine occurs every ten years, when there is a great drought. After the country had been ravaged by the White and Red armies and the in-roads of the Czecho-Slovakians, came the terrible famine. Some people ate bread compounded of grain mingled with ground bone. During that terrible winter of 1921-22, thousands perished, dead bodies lay in piles. Many parents gave all the remaining food to the children, sacrificing their own lives. Cannibalism was practiced, human flesh was actually offered for sale.

"The great numbers of orphans in Russia, perhaps five million will present a stupendous problem for Russia to solve in the future. Since three fourths of the horses were dead, the people had to spade the ground, or hitch themselves to the plows. Their daily ration now is twelve ounces of shelled corn, supplemented by grass.

Speaking on Sunday at the students' Sunday School, Mr. Kenworthy said: "Despite rumors to the contrary, people of Russia are allowed freedom to worship in their own way. The present system of Government permits this freedom as long as it does not conflict with the political issues of the day.

"However, the newspapers have exploited the persecution of numbers of priests, the robbing of the churches. The Bolshevik government claims to be atheistic. Naturally in the grind of the military rule, officials of the Catholic church in Russia have come under the iron heel of the law. The issue then becomes, to the public eye, a conflict between government and church, without proper investigation being accorded.

"You have all heard of robbery of the churches in Russia. The Russians through generations of practice and tradition have developed a ritual which requires three hours to carry out. They have accumulated untold wealth for the decoration of the church robes of the priests. When starvation faced the Russian peasants the officials of the government asked the church for some of their surplus wealth to help buy food for the famine-struck multitude. They refused. It was then that the government seized the gems and accumulated wealth of the great churches against the protests of the church officials. The government is recognizing the dire need of the people and doing everything possible for the people. But they are unable to meet the sudden desolation that has overcome the country and people. They need the help of the outside world."

J. Hodges Ricks, '05, of Richmond, Va., recently had an article on the juvenile court in the "Journal of Social Forces," a magazine published at the University of North Carolina. This is a new magazine, only three numbers having been issued, and is very much worthwhile.

Guilfordians Attend Annual Meeting of Science

work and the welding together in a closer bond of strength and fellowship, the scientists of the state, meets annually at the larger institutions of the state, alternating between Greensboro, Durham, Wake Forest, Raleigh and Chapel Hill. At these meetings student and instructors of the various colleges and universities read papers, not exceeding fifteen minutes in length, concerning some question of research. Dr. E. C. Brooks, Superintendent of Public Instruction of North Carolina, attended the meeting this year to investigate the methods of the association. In an address he explained that the problem confronting the schools of the State was how much science should be instituted in the lower grades of the school. Further, people had come to the realization that science is the basis of education in public schools and therefore should be stressed to a greater extent.

A. A. Dixon, class of '09, now instructor at the State college, Raleigh, read two papers, one on "An Electrolytic Interrupter" and "A Review of the Work on Isotopes."

S. C. Smith, '18, doing graduate work at the University of North Carolina, read two papers prepared by him in conjunction with A. S. Wheeler. The subjects with which he dealt were, "The Constitution of the Dichlorohydroxyethylidene bis nitro anilines" and "A Peculiar Reaction Between Dichloroacetic Acid and Aromatic Amines."

William Wolf, '23, newly elected an assistant in chemistry Haverford college, read a paper on "Some Phases of Digestion in Cambarus."

In addition to above, who appeared on the program, there were in attendance from Guilford, President Raymond Binford; Professors Jos. D. White, chemistry; H. N. Baker, biology; R. I. Newlin, mathematics.

Professor L. L. White of the Education Department has completed his work as inspector of high schools for this year. During April 25, 26, and 27, he visited the following high schools: Pilot Mountain, Mount Airy, White Plains, and Elkin in surry county, and Jonesville in Yadkin county. Concerning Pilot Mountain, Professor White reports that they are soon to have a new high school building, costing approximately $50,000. Mt. Airy is to spend $60,000 additional on its high school building. Dobson is planning to add more to its high school and take care of the consolidated schools. Elkin is planning to spend $50,000 to $60,000 on its high school equipment. Generally speaking, Professor White's report is quite favorable.

Who Has Seen Jean-Christophe?

Miss Hoffman asks that whoever has taken the French book entitled "Jean-Christophe" by Romain Rolland, from the library, will please return it at an early date.

Biology

Spot Taylor is working out some problems in variation as a basis for his thesis.

Bacteriology students analyze H₂O.

Water analysis will be made in bacteriology class. This will be a good chance for anyone to find out the condition of his home well. Bottles for the taking of the samples may be procured at the laboratory.

Who Borrowed Your Cat, Sonny?

Stray cats are in order at the laboratory. The work this year will include a few demonstrations on anatomy of vertebrates.

Faculty Meeting At Dr. Binford's

The faculty meeting was held at the home of the president on Thursday. The principal discussion of the meeting was the unification of the work in the curriculum. The faculty is considering some scheme for making the relationship of the work in the different departments and practical application more clearly evident to the students.

Dr. Raymond Binford delivered two commencement addresses during the week of April 30 to May 5. He addressed the students of Bethany high school on Wednesday and Pleasant Grove high school, Alamance county, on Friday. He is scheduled to appear at the Walkertown high school on Monday, May 14, to deliver the commencement address.

FROM THE PRESIDENT'S OFFICE

Guilford's greatest asset is her alumni and former students. Their interest and loyalty is a great source of gratification to those who carry on the work of the College. Guilford's future depends very largely upon the quality of the incoming students. Now is the time for every friend of the College to present the of the smallsplendid advantage of the small college, and especially the merits of Guilford to the high school. Let us bring some splendid young men and weomen to Guilford next year.
