OPEN FORUM

In this day and age, in which, as in all previous ages, young people are going to the dogs, there has been much discussion on the subject of student government in schools and colleges. Before we state our opinion, let us try and define student government. Is it not to be a government of the students, by the students, and for the students? In men's student government the idea seems to be pretty well carried out, but on the other hand, for some reason, young women are not considered capable of self-government. Of course it is an accepted fact that students need some guiding hand, but when this hand becomes handcuffs it ceases to be so acceptable.

At present student government contains several defects. In the first place there is a superfluity of rules and restrictions. We ought to profit by the experience of Judaism. One reason for its insufficiency was the fact that Jews could not do anything without the permission of the law to which they were bound hand and foot.

The ideal situation would be one in which there were four or five cardinal rules and all other matters of conduct were to be decided by the students' judgment and a consideration of their relation to the cardinal four. Then, too, rather than rules and restrictions as the basis of government, we would have admiration and respect of the one in charge, since these two qualities are requisites of a successful government. If students know that they are being trusted and put on their own responsibility, they will be more apt to respect the wishes of the one in charge, and observe their standards of right and wrong. Nearly all students of sufficient intellectuality to enter college should be given an opportunity to develop it. What we need is a student government by students who are interested and capable of carrying it on rather than a faculty government for students incapable of deciding things for themselves. Such a government will tend to develop initiative, whereas under faculty rule it is repressed. In spite of the disrepute into which conscience has come lately—perhaps because of associations—is not conscience just our personal conception of morals? Since we all have some such conception, most students are capable of solving minor problems—of conduct as well as of algebra—and it is an essential part of college education to be allowed to do so.

DR. PERISHO ATTENDS HOOVER INAUGURATION

13 Irving street. This is the meeting now regularly attended by the Hoovers. Promptly at two minutes before eleven o'clock, President-elect Hoover, his wife, Herbert, Jr., and his wife, and Allan, along with Herbert Hoover's sister, drove up to the Meeting House. The large crowd on the outside unable to get seats in the house began a great applause, which Herbert Hoover quickly stopped.

On Sabbath afternoon, the Perishos made a dinner call on Senator and Mrs. Norbeck. So many visitors were in Washington that the streets were thickly crowded. It was almost impossible to drive a car along the main streets of the city. Upon going to their rooms the car driven by Mr. Jones was going north on 3rd street, trying to evade the congestion of the city. A few blocks north of the Capitol they found that the streets were more open and were going along nicely, when for some cause unknown to the party, they crossed an East and West street car line on H street. Almost the instant that they drove upon the car line, a street car rounding west struck the automobile square on the side. Mr. Jones escaped all injury. Mrs. Beebe was severely shocked and her body bruised. The worst injury by far to any of the party was received by Inez Beebe Perisho who hurt her ankle, her lower limb, bruised her shoulder, and broke her collar bone. The car was badly damaged.

cated. The many racial divisions, languages, religions, poverty, and economic oppressions hamper unity and progress. England's policy in India has long been one of imperialism. Not until recent years have the people attempted to gain their independence. The work of Mahatma Gandhi, the world-famous reformer and religious leader, has done more to improve conditions than any other factor. His non-violence, non-co-operative policy has commanded recognition among even his opponents; and the spinning wheel which he introduced as a means of escape from economic oppression has improved living conditions.

India considers Christianity, but hesitates to accept it as she witnesses the example which America as a Christian nation presents.

In a talk to the joint Y. M. and Y. W. C. A. societies, Miss Gould spoke enthusiastically of the immenseness of the Student Volunteer movement. She discussed service rendered in such fields as the mining sections of Southern Africa and the transformation resulting in the lives of the natives.

She urged every student to enlarge his and her realm of thought, to endeavor to see the world as one common soil, and the races as a brotherhood of mankind.

Mr. J. Hoge Ricks, of the class of 1915, visited the college recently. Mr. Ricks is judge of the Juvenile Court of Richmond, Virginia.
