Religion in Your Vocation

“Link in the Chain,” Film for R. E. Week

Panel Discusses Using Religion in Chosen Vocation

What is the “wealth” in a teacher’s life? The answer was portrayed in the motion picture, Link in the Chain, which was shown to both the Freshman and Upper-classman Chapel during Religious Emphasis Week.

James Cagney, the star of the movie, portrays a college professor who has reached retirement age. Minutes before leaving for his testimonial dinner, he is prompted to rummage through his memory-filled desk. Therein, he comes across a book with his caricature drawn on its fly-leaf, a newspaper clipping of a student’s arrest and two halves of a $10,000 check.

As he sees the objects, he remembers their significance and the viewer becomes aware of his influence. His life has included more than classroom teaching; his concern and compassion have helped individual students more than he realizes. As the third memory fades, he slips into unconsciousness and his death is discovered by another faculty member calling him to dinner.

As part of the Religious Emphasis Week program, a panel discussion was held Tuesday night at eight o’clock in the Fine Arts Room of the library. Presided by Agnes Stem, the panel, consisting of Rachel Richardson, Royce Angel, Jimmy Askins, and Woody Finley, discussed the topic “How I Plan to Use Religion in My Vocation.”

Rachel Richardson, presenting the position of one going into the teaching profession, pointed out the educator’s responsibility in leading an exemplary life. She mentioned the importance of being impartial and of treating each student as a unique individual. In teaching, Rachel concluded, a Christian should try to instill in the student a desire for learning, which is the highest purpose for which God has created man.

“The virtue of a businessman can not be measured by his extraordinary exertions, but rather by his everyday conduct,” said Royce Angel in talking about the businessman’s point of view. He made the analogy that in the same way that a label serves to identify a product, so can Christianity be a label in the world of business. Royce also remarked about the businessman’s responsibility to his church and to his community.

In relating social work to religion, Woody Finley talked about the challenge of being able to be of service to mankind. Not only does a worker help to solve and prevent problems, but more important is the fact that he is helping an individual to help himself.

Jimmy Askins made the distinction that even though he is planning to go into medical work as an occupation, he hopes to make his vocation that of being a full-time Christian. With conviction, he spoke of wanting to serve mankind and of the unlimited power that can be obtained by having faith in God.

Merle Shelton led a song at the start of the program. An effective devotional was given by John Juchter.

S.C.A. Runs Vesper Services

Both morning worship and vesper services were held during Religious Emphasis Week on Guilford campus, February 11-15.

Rev. James Glasse of Vanderbilt University, main speaker of the week, conducted the vespers on Monday and Tuesday nights. The rest of the week the services were run by the organizations in the Student Christian Association. Morning watches were sponsored by the Wesley Foundation on Monday, the Westminster Fellowship on Wednesday, and the Baptist S. U. on Friday. Evening services were run by the Young Friends on Wednesday, the Canterbury Club on Thursday, and the Baptist group on Friday.

Morning services were held at 8:10 and vespers at 6:45 in the Student Union.

“Rhythm Vets” to Play for Valentine Dance Tomorrow

Red and white hearts will form the setting for the annual Valentine Dance tomorrow evening in the gymnasium. Guilford College students will dance from 8:30 until 11:30 to the music of the “Rhythm Vets,” the A & T College dance band which played for the Monogram Club Christmas Dance.

The Valentine Dance is given every year by the Social Committee which is headed this season by Pat Lifsey. It is a semi-formal, no flower dance and admission is free.

The decorations committee, under the guidance of Clara Hughes Jones and Carolyn Newlin, has been hard at work to assure dancers of a truly romantic scene for the evening—complete with hearts, cupids and lovebirds. Rachel Richardson and Ann Rollins head the refreshment committee.

All Guilford College students and their dates are extended a cordial invitation by the Social Committee to come and enjoy the Valentine Dance tomorrow night.

Rev. Glasse Speaks on “What Does My Religion Have to Do with My Job?”

The program which affected most of the students in the events of the Religious Emphasis Week was the chapel on Tuesday morning. Rev. James Glasse was the guest speaker. Since the theme of the Religious Emphasis Week was “Religion’s relation to my vocation,” therefore it was very appropriate that Rev. Glasse spoke on “What Does My Religion Have to Do with My Job?”

Rev. Glasse is a member of the faculty in the Divinity School of Vanderbilt University. He attended

Occidental College of Los Angeles, California as an undergraduate, then he did his graduate work at Yale Divinity School. He has taught in three colleges. In 1953 he was teaching in Yale Divinity School and was the director of field work there.

In chapel, Rev. Glasse spoke of marriage and vocation as two important aspects of our lives; and these college years have great influence on these two areas. He reminded the student body that no

Student Government Active in Guilford’s Campus Affairs

M.S.G. Announces Accomplishments

Recently, M.S.G. has managed the return of the pay phone to Old South. The Men’s Student Government was partially successful in collecting money owed the telephone company by the students. The deficit was made up from the M.S.G. treasury.

The length of time that the telephone will remain depends entirely upon the manner in which it is used.

A big accomplishment of the M.S.G. has been the acquisition of a Juke Box, which we now have in the Student Union. This Juke Box required a great deal of hard work, and lengthy discussion before it was finally approved as an addition to the Student Union. This is something that we have all wanted for a long time, and it should provide a great deal of enjoyment.

Due to numerous reports and rumors received by faculty members, the M.S.G. has been asked to submit information concerning the behavior and conduct of men students. This investigation may prove to be quite embarrassing.

Several new by-laws and amendments have been drawn up and will be inserted into the Constitution to cover existing “loop holes.” In order to build up the strength of the M.S.G. body, compulsory attendance of meetings has been agreed upon. In the event a member is unable to attend a meeting, his standing alternate will attend.

W.S.G. and M.S.G. Hold Joint Meeting

The Women’s and Men’s Student Governments met on Monday, 21 of January, in a joint session to discuss the installation of a juke box in the Student Union. Several members of the faculty who were concerned in the issue were present. A discussion of the problems and details of the juke box took place for over an hour; then the two student governments showed by a vote that each was solidly behind the idea. It was recommended by the two presidents, Anne Rae Thomas and Roger Redman, that a group be appointed to discuss the matter with a committee chosen by Dr. Milner. Such a group was chosen, and the meeting was adjourned. Action was taken on the matter and now there is a juke box in the Student Union. This makes available to the students a large variety of music, and helps improve the atmosphere of informality so necessary to the success of such an institution as the Student Union.

Hildebrand Has Master’s Thesis Published

The February issue of Analytical Chemistry contains a thesis by Gary Hildebrand.

Many of us know Gary, who graduated from Guilford in 1954 and entered UNC Graduate School in Chemistry in the fall of 1954. He received an assistantship in the Chemistry Department.

His research was directed by Dr.
