

Rehearsal Begins on "The Scarecrow"

She is not an ordinary witch; she is vindictive. Why? Because the now reputable Justice Merton has shamed her (although in their youth they had an affair, the product of which was an illegitimate child.)

This is the setting for the Reveler's Club Spring production, The Scarecrow, by Percy Mackay, to be presented March 10 and 11.

The play opens in the witch's den where the witch, Goody Ricky (Evelyn Westphal) and her confidante, Dickon (Stuart Lennox, the Devil incarnate) are making a scarecrow. Rachel Merton (Jamie Mathews), who is the Justice's niece and "highly superstitious" soon enters the house to buy a "Mirror of Truth" which is supposed to reveal the true character of people.

Later Rachel is reprimanded by her betrothed, Squire Richard Talbot (John Huffman), for believing in such foolishness. When Justice Merton learns of his niece's purchase, he admonishes Goody Ricky, "You shall hang!" The witch then warns him that she might reveal their past. And in order to avenge the Justice's threats, the witch and the Devil promptly create a man from the scarecrow who will seek the hand of Mistress Rachel.

Lord Ravensband (Michael Keyes), as the hollow man is called, is disguised as a Count and succeeds in impressing Rachel temporarily. But of course, truth and good triumph.

All ends well. Witches never win, especially not in Victorian drama.

Other members of the cast include Tim Vanhoy as Minister Dodge; Robin Heritage, Mistress Merton; Margie Rubin, Susan; Jim Hudson, Captain Bugby; Nancy Dawson, Amelia; and Alan Mabe, Sir Charles Reddington.

Committee chairmen for the production are Jim Hudson, Scenery; Betts Darnell, Make-up; Jane Allen, Costumes; Jim Hudson, Properties; Nancy Dawson, Publicity; Dave Holt, Lighting; and Robin Heritage, stage manager.

Registrar Resigns Post, Enters Duke

Guilford's registrar, Bill Lee Yates, has recently resigned to enter the Hospital Administration program of Duke Hospital. Mr. Yates, who was a staff member at Guilford from 1957 until his recent resignation, served first as Dean of Men, and later as registrar. His study at Duke will last for a two-year period, terminating in an assignment as administrator of a hospital.

In a recent interview the former registrar reported, "This is something I've had in mind for a long time. The opportunity came, and I took it. I'm extremely glad I did, for the work is fascinating, and, while I miss Guilford a great deal, I'm very happy in my work here."

Five Guilford Students Attending Model UN Session at Duke

Five Guilford students left for Duke University this morning to attend the United Nations Model General Assembly which will be in session through Saturday. Guilford delegates are Dan Raiford, chairman; Robin Holland, Georgette Shihadi, Miriam Almaguer, and Penny Smith. Mr. and Mrs. Paul Zoff, IRC advisors, are also attending the Assembly.

After the opening plenary session, the group will divide into five subcommittees to discuss the national problems in evidence today. Guilford will be represented in each of these groups.

Each delegation will represent a country which is a member of the United Nations. The Guilford group will assume the identity of Cuba, thus taking on the identity of a communistic government.

"We feel that the Cuban problem may be brought up in the plenary sessions," said Penny Smith, president of the IRC. "Therefore, we are preparing to defend Cuba and to have arguments prepared for this as well as the five committee topics."

In the sub-committees resolutions will be drawn up and will be presented in two plenary sessions (which correspond to the General Assembly session in the U. N.). They will be debated and then voted on. Dan Raiford will cast Guilford's one vote since he is chairman of the delegation.

Outstanding and noted speaker for the session will be Frederick Boland, president of the UN General Assembly.

This third annual Model UN Assembly is sponsored by the Collegiate Council. Last year it was held at the University of North Carolina.

PAGEANT SEEKS BEAUTY QUEEN

The Fiesta of Five Flags in Pensacola, Fla., is looking for a coed from a southern campus to bear the title "Miss Golden Anniversary of Naval Aviation." Prizes totaling $5,500, including a Hollywood vacation, await winners in the 1961 Fiesta Beauty Pageant, to be held June 6-11 in conjunction with a mammoth celebration of the 50th Anniversary of Naval Aviation.

To be eligible for competition in the Fiesta Beauty Pageant, entrants must be sponsored by a recognized institution such as a college or university or by an accredited sorority, fraternity, or other college-connected society. Applicants must be from 18 to 25 years of age and have never been married. Final screening will limit the number of contestants to 35, with not more than one from a campus.

The first prize will be $2,500 in savings bonds plus an expense-paid trip to Hollywood, Calif., visits to movie and television studios and an appearance in a television performance.

The first and second runner-up will receive savings bonds of $1,000 and $500, respectively. Additional awards of $250 each will be presented to the most talented non-finalist and to the young woman chosen by fellow contestants as "Miss Congeniality."

Further information and application blanks may be obtained from the Fiesta of Five Flags, Box 803, Pensacola, Fla.

Attention: All Red-Blooded Guilfordians

Guilford Blood to Flow Tomorrow for Red Cross

The following is an excerpt from an article written for the Winston-Salem Journal by Margaret Hawthorn.

I was convinced that I had stepped into a modern-day vampire initiation ceremony when I crossed the threshold of the Red Cross bloodmobile. They were out to get my blood and I wasn't completely convinced that I didn't want to hang onto some of it for myself.

Why was I there preparing to give up part of my All-American vital red blood? But I didn't have much time to think about it. Whisk! I was taken under tow by a kind little blood-taker otherwise known as a Gray Lady and shown to a seat in the line-up.

First Impression

With a skeptical eye I glanced around the room to get a first impression. Everything seemed to be neatness, order and precision. No one was shouting, no one was flustered, and everyone knew exactly what his job was and he was doing it.

By the time my turn came to sign up, I was seeing myself as a heroine ready to give my life blood to a good cause.

A medical check-up was the next item in line after registration. Plop! The thermometer was into my mouth. Then it was out and my pulse was being timed. After being convinced that my temperature was normal and that I definitely had a pulse, I was relayed to the blood pressure nurse. Puff, puff, wheeze. That test I passed successfully. I was beginning to feel healthy again . . . until I came to the blood-testing station.

Blue Fluid

Little bottles of a strange blue fluid were sitting on a tray. At first I felt weak, for I feared that this was some poor soul's own blood that he had donated to the cause. After all, everyone has heard of "blue" babies. I was relieved when the nurse pricked my finger and explained that if my drop of blood sank, it was heavy with iron and therefore my hemoglobin level was fine. I began to feel worthwhile again because this was the first sign of blood I'd seen since I got there.

My curiosity was beginning to rise, and I kept trying to peer around the little curtains into the actual blood-giving area. All the healthy blood donors go there, and I wanted to follow.

The Red Cross has to be very particular about who gives blood. Many are turned down. Only those in good physical condition go through . . . By the time you get through the processing line, you feel like the health queen for the year.

Physically Fit

I was now deemed physically fit to be passed behind the screens to the blood donors' guild. While I waited the nurse explained that there really isn't anything to this blood-giving business. "After all," she explained, "you have an extra pint of blood in you floating around doing nothing except waiting for you to cut your finger."

"It only takes 24 hours to regain the pint of blood you lost."

And then I was ready to give my blood. A needle was inserted just below the bend of my elbow. Then all I had to do was relax and squeeze a little rubber rod until my pint was full.

It was so simple that I almost felt guilty when I ate up the refreshments that the Red Cross provided afterwards.

The only painful part of the whole process was having to tell my weight.

BLOODMOBILE WILL BE HERE TOMORROW IN COLLEGE UNION

Tomorrow blood will flow freely on Guilford campus. The bloodmobile will be here in the College Union between 10:00-3:30 p.m., on its seventh annual visit. And all the Red Cross is asking is one small pint of blood from each individual—a pint that will be replenished in the body by the next day.

Through this Red Cross program, voluntary donations make it possible to supply whole blood and blood derivatives without charge to (1) those of us who may need it, (2) to members of our Armed Forces and patients in veterans hospitals, and (3) for civilian emergency needs in time of disaster.

Last year there were only 148 donors from the college and community. This year that number should be doubled. There is no medical risk in giving blood. All donors will be checked at the center by registered nurses and the physician in charge. No one will be allowed to donate unless found physically able to do so.

Students between the ages of 18 and 21, who are not married, must have written permission of a parent or legal guardian in order to donate.

Blood cannot be manufactured. It can be obtained only from a living . . . and charitable individual. So if you want to play a vital part in saving lives and restoring health, be at the Union between 10:00 and 3:30 tomorrow. It doesn't hurt and it only takes a little while.
