Preyer Chairman Named

Ellen Preyer, a sophomore from Greensboro, has been named chairman of the "Young Citizens for Preyer" on the Guilford Campus.

L. Richardson Preyer is the Democratic candidate for Congress from the Sixth District.

Ellen's appointment was announced at a press conference last week on the campus of the University of North Carolina at Greensboro.

Speaking to student leaders from nine college campuses, Mr.

Preyer said, "It's bumper-sticking, doorbell ringing time again and we need your help. But we want more from you than legwork, we want to listen to you, we want you to turn us on."

Preyer, commenting on student dissent said, "I believe in dissent, and we want to listen to what you have to say."

Jack Pinnix, Editor of the Carolinian at UNC-G, is the district co-chairman of "Young Citizens for Preyer."

Wallace

'A Corn-Poned Hitler'

By MARK LESSNER

He is the first third-party candidate since Roosevelt's Bull Moose Party in 1912. The strength of his campaign is surprising many of the politicians today, not to mention his opponents, Nixon and Humphrey.

According to Time magazine, he now has one-fifth of the electorate, or 13.5 million adult Americans, behind him—"He appeals to a forgotten class of Americans," as one Guilford College student puts it.

He is George C. Wallace, and despite the fact that he may only receive 21 per cent of the popular vote in November (according to the Sept. 29 Gallup Poll), his American Independent Party is threatening to throw the election of the next President into the House of Representatives.

His advent on the American political scene is causing diverse reactions among the nation's citizens. In a recent informal survey on the Guilford College Campus, students voiced a number of opinions about the forceful Alabamian.

"I don't like him. I'm glad I can't vote," said a student from Greensboro. "I think he's very convincing in his arguments—but then all dictators are," said a local fellow student. A co-ed from Virginia commented, "He's a potentially dangerous man. He appeals to extremists and may start a civil war. But he is also living proof that there is an alternative to the Democratic and Republican parties. He is living proof of democracy."

*Another male student was more vehement: "He s---. We'd be regressing if he were elected."

In some polls, Wallace is said to be running second to Richard Nixon. The other two candidates are not taking Wallace for

GEORGE ROYCROFT

New College Editor Told

George B. Roycroft, a former reporter for Channel 8 TV in High Point, has been named Director of Information Services and Publications for Guilford College.

The 24-year-old Durham native graduated from High Point College in 1966 and joined WGHP-TV to cover the Greensboro "beat." On July 1 he began his duties here, which include editing the quarterly Alumni Journal and serving on the Publications Board.

Roycroft, who thinks Guilford is rather cosmopolitan for a small school, says he hopes to change Guilford's image through better coverage of campus events in the area.

He replaces Caroline Carlton, who resigned in May to accept a position at Duke University.

Inter-Collegiate Council Formed

By PAT ANDREW

Guilford College, A & T University, Bennett College, Greensboro College, and UNC-G have banded together to form the Greensboro Inter-Collegiate Council.

The Guilford Student Legislature will vote Monday night on the council constitution, and if approved Guilford will become the first official member of the organization.

The council, which has been in formation for almost a year now, was organized to foster communications between the member schools and to give the colleges and universities in the Greensboro area a stronger voice in the local community.

Gerald Phillips, a senior from Greensboro College and temporary president of the organization, outlined one of the council's objectives as bringing the separate student bodies together for a close working relationship. He looked toward the eventual publication of an inter-campus newspaper to circulate between the five campuses.

Another advantage the council would provide for the member schools would be the additional financial means needed to secure "name" groups for social events. The council would like to sponsor at least two or three concerts each year for the student bodies of the member schools.

The council also hopes to organize some student volunteer services.

Greensboro Mayor Carson Bane has expressed his enthusiasm and cooperation, and has offered to work with the council.

Zack Lowe and Charles Bledsoe, representing Guilford, have been meeting with the council since early last spring and have worked toward securing equal representation for member schools.

repeating much material if she attended the senior year, so she elected to come to Guilford early.

She is interested in math, but also wishes to become well-rounded in the humanities area.

She was attracted to Guilford partly because it was a "family school" but mostly because of the versatility it has by being a small school.

Jack Goodman also skipped his senior year at Page High School in Greensboro. He is a day student majoring in Political Science.

His interest in the humanities is shown by his major and by being a Richardson Fellow.

The finalists of the National Merit Scholarship Program will be announced in February.

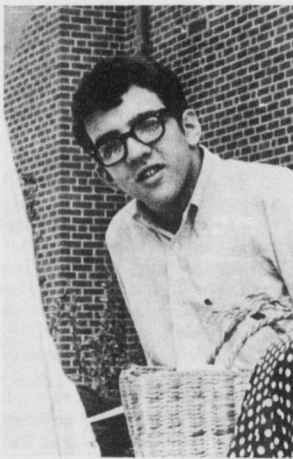

In National Merit Competition...

Two Named Semi-finalists

Two Guilford College students, Jean Parvin and Jack Goodman, were notified recently of their selection as National Merit Scholarship semi-finalists. Only 17 per cent of the high school students who took the tests are named semi-finalists.

It is also unusual for a Guilford College student to be named a semi-finalist because in most cases the semi-finalists are just beginning their senior year of high school. However, these two talented freshmen skipped their senior year.

Jean Parvin, from Clearwater, Florida, attended Clearwater High School. She took extra courses beginning in the eighth grade which enabled her to "get ahead" and skip her senior year. She felt that she would be

Revelers To Stage Three Productions

Three major productions are set to be staged this year by the Guilford College Revelers Club.

The group met last week for the purpose of drawing up their plans for the year.

The first play, to be given Nov. 15, 16, and 17, will be Bertolt Brecht's A Man's A Man, a comedy with an underlying theme of the effects of militarism on the individual and society. Donald Deagon of the Drama Department, director, will begin casting soon.

In early December, Pat Gilbreath will direct one of her own plays, Snowy Day. This production was performed in the 1966-67 season under the title His Name Was Santa Claus. A large cast will be used for this light children's production.

Shakespeare's farcical comedy Twelfth Night will be put on in the spring.

Two months are being left open at the end of the school year for work on studio productions of one-act plays, with the possible entry to the Carolina Dramatic Association One-Act Festival. Guilford's entry last spring, Edward Albee's The American Dream, received Distinguished Award in both the district and state festivals.

A special clinic on the techniques of make-up is held every Monday night in the backstage area of Dana Auditorium.

Students interested in work with the Revelers may contact Marilyn McIntyre, president of the club, or Hank Hackett.
