Charles Morgan To Speak At Guilford's NSA Time-Out

Guilford College will participate in the National Student Association's "Time Out" program Tuesday, Oct. 29. Vicki Wyszynski is campus co-ordinator for the event.

Time Out, as proposed by NSA, is a day set aside for students to discuss current issues, national and local, and to plan student involvement in these concerns. Instead of attending classes, students will attend specially-planned seminars on subjects which they themselves have instigated: a speak-out session, a city-wide solidarity march, a student-teacher panel discussion, and facilitator interviews.

One of the features of the day will be an address by Charles Morgan, Atlanta lawyer who is an attorney for the American Civil Liberties Union. He will speak to the student body during regular convocation hour at 10 a.m., and moderate the teach-in during the afternoon march downtown.

The Guilford faculty to date has shown mixed feelings toward the program, which will involve cutting classes. While some faculty members give full support and intend to hold no classes, others will consider absence from class a regular cut.

Included will be seminars on the draft, community work with children, the free university system, and institutional racism.

Nick Marshall and Tim Snyder, in charge of the seminar on the draft, plan to have Dr. Carroll Feagins of the Philosophy Department speak on conscientious objection, and hope to bring in a representative of the local draft board to answer questions.

The seminar on community action will be an open discussion of opportunities for students to do volunteer work in the Greensboro area. Co-ordinator Linda Rogers hopes to have several outside speakers come to this meeting to help involve interested students in local community projects, such as tutorial, special education, organization of small "companion" groups in poverty areas, and voter education.

Steve Pruitt is in charge of the seminar on the free university system, which will be basically an open discussion on the definition of this plan and how to bring about academic reform and next year's curriculum changes at Guilford.

Allen Toothaker, is planning the institutional racism seminar, and he said, "We will investigate the historical development of racism and how it affects American institutions and society." Will Allred, executive director of the state's Council of Human Relations, will also

"Senior Citizens" Join Coed Living On Campus

By NANCY THOMAS

Guilford's second experience with coeducational living has taken a unique twist with the arrival of four "senior citizens" at Friends Home.

The Home was originally built as a rest home but due to a housing shortage was rented by Guilford in 1967 and turned into a girls' dormitory. This year the problem of a shortage in living quarters for male students was solved by putting 36 boys and 17 girls in opposite halves of the building.

When asked how they liked the situation, the majority of the residents expressed satisfaction.

"You have a feeling of togetherness," explains Buddy Smith.

Lou Elverson believes "If you're going to have to live together in life, you ought to be able to learn it at Guilford."

Val Haith replied, "I love it. The biggest reason is because of the boys."

"It's an interesting experience living in a co-ed dorm... It builds unity between the students," said Charles Hill.

Some of the residents feel that there are drawbacks to co-ed living.

"I can't study around here because of the distraction,"—Mike Hunt.

"Other girls have a better chance to meet more people in their regular dorm life."—Robin West.

The elderly residents are also happy at the Home.

"I like it. I love young people... They haven't disturbed me a bit."—Mrs. Stella Dow.

"I have no objection... They are very nice."—Mrs. Ethel C. Nevling.

Meet the Candidates

In an effort to involve the campus with the 1968 election and its issues, the Young Democrats' and Young Republicans' Clubs have planned a special "Meet the Candidates" program for Monday, Oct. 28 at 8 p.m.

The program, which will be held in the Leak Room of Duke Memorial Hall, will include representatives of the national Presidential candidates, as well as the North Carolina gubernatorial nominees. Each speaker on the panel will present a ten-minute summary of the candidates' views.

Lest We Slight Nixon..

By EMILY HEDRICK

Lest the Republicans think The Guilfordian is slighting them in its campaign coverage, an honest effort has been made to seek out both major parties' candidates and evaluate them accordingly.

A brisk, confident Richard M. Nixon flew into Greensboro last week. It was not the first time. Eight years ago he came—when he was running for President, you remember.

But the man who appeared this time was different... After failing once, he had learned his lessons well.

Apparently, he had done his homework before coming back to Greensboro. He was met by numerous members of the press and news media at the local airport, including this reporter and Guilfordian editor Jim Garvin. As he walked down the long line of shuffling dignitaries, Our Man Milhous happened to stop near me.

A student of Youth (so we're told), Nixon made a pronounced effort to stick out his hand. While shaking hands I made the comment that I went to a Quaker college just as he had done.

"Oh, you go to Guilford," the candidate informed me, chalking up Brownie points. "It's a fine school, a fine school."

As I was muttering something like, "Yessir, we think so, too," he went on about his alma mater, Whittier (in California), and our fine sister colleges throughout the country, such as Earlham, Swarthmore, and Haverford.

At this point, I popped up with what my colleagues from the press were heretofore denied: an interview question. It went something like, "What value has your connection with the Society of Friends been to you?"

Notebooks and pencils flashed, cameras were trained—a flurry of activity as the Activist College Upstart was getting away with a

Cox Evacuated After 50 Years

After a nine-month construction period, Guilford's new men's dormitory is opened for occupancy.

Moving began first for students housed in Frazier Apartments and Friends Home, followed by residents of Cox Hall.

At first some Cox residents were dubious about having to move from their dormitory, which, after fifty years of service, has acquired "character." However, with the new structure completed, few complaints were heard.

Landrum Cross, assistant dean of students, is head resident of new "New Men's." The building, which faces Milner Hall, is partitioned into carpeted, air-conditioned, four-room suites. The bedrooms are connected by parlors, and each suite has its own bathroom facilities.

This arrangement is intended to provide both privacy and interaction among students.

Linda Willis, an 18-year-old freshman from Greensboro, was crowned at today's half-time activities as Homecoming Queen, 1968.

Daughter of Dr. and Mrs. R.F. Willis of 802 Westover Terrace, she is a biology major. According to Linda, her hobbies are "swimming, horseback riding, drawing, and mountaineering."

Miss Willis was selected by a campus-wide vote Monday night from a field of sixteen girls sponsored by various classes and organizations. She represented the Men's Interdormitory Government in the balloting.

Runner-up for the title was Linda Sale, Sophomore Class representative, who served as Maid of Honor. An English major, Linda is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred A. Sale of Route 1, Ronda. She lists her hobbies as "music, needlepoint and spectator sports." She also says she "goofs around with drawing, too."

Other members of the Queen's Court were Lynn Culler, Pam Pancoast, and Martha Petty, who were sponsored by the Monogram Club, Milner Hall, and the Junior Class, respectively.

Lynn, a 21-year-old senior from Winston-Salem, is a sociology major who enjoys "all types of spectator sports, traveling, and swimming." Her parents are Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Culler, Jr.

An English major, Pam is a junior from Purcellville, Va. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. Joseph Pancoast.

Martha, who is 20 years old, is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Tom Petty of Rural Hall. She is a cheerleader, treasurer of her class, and is a member of the college choir. She is also an English major.

Co-ordinator of the entire Homecoming occasion was Valerie France, head of the Special Events committee of the Guilford College Union.

Various committee chairmen under her supervision were Teela Clifford and Clarence Yokely, who were in charge of the Friday afternoon festivities; Sue Sherrill and Linda Mercer, luau decorations; Wendy Miller and Nancy Mundy, the Queen and her court; Brenda Smith and Diane Williams, parade; and Martha Carter and Clarence Mattocks, Saturday afternoon, which included the judging of the dorm decorations.

In conjunction with the Special Events committee, the Dance and Pop Artists committee, headed by George Davis, has booked the Impacts Combo for the Saturday night dance.
