TM Presentation on 21 st

An introductory lecture, leading to lessons in Transcendental Meditation will be delivered Monday night at 8 p.m. in the Leak Room. Joseph Clark, east coast coordinator of the Student International Meditation Society (SIMS), will deliver the lecture.

The introductory lecture is the first part of a seven stage course in Transcendental Meditation offered by SIMS. An extended course on meditation, entitled "Science of Creative Intelligence," is currently offered for credit at several schools including Goddard College, the University of Virginia, and the University of California. Groundwork for a credit course at UNC-CH and UNC-G is being undertaken by SIMS. Transcendental Meditation.

Meditation. "TM" refered to as by meditators, is a process designed to give the body and mind the type of rest found in deep sleep. Unlike true yoga, TM does not depend on an ascetic life-style or time consuming preparation. SIMS states that four one hour lessons are enough to give the student the essential elements of TM. It depends not on concentration or contemplation, but on a casting aside of thought in an effort to reach "pure intelligence," according to meditators.

TM has been given quite a boost by publication in this month's Scientific American of a study indicating many beneficial effects, both mental and physical. The study, by Dr.'s R. Keith Wallace and Herbert Benson of Harvard Medical School, states that TM is an effective relaxing process, of value in treating alcoholism, drug addiction, and hypertension. Meditators claim that TM allows them to "do less but accomplish more."

The Journal of the American Medical Association recently reported that of drug users turning to TM, 80% lost their desire and/or need for drugs. Studies of TM have also appeared in Science magazine and the American Journal of Physiology.

Fees for the complete lessons will be $35.00. The fee covers personal instruction, and group discussions.

THE GUILFORDIAN

TM is not a religious technique, and is affiliated with no religious group, although meditators claim that an individual's religion may be enhanced by the practice of TM.

An estimated 1000 people are currently practicing meditation in North Carolina, several hundred of those in the Greensboro-Winston-Salem area.

Comprehensives Are Examined

Continued from page 3 complacency was disturbing. There were various questions raised at the meeting such as: (1) what is the purpose of the comp? (2) who really benefits from the comp? and (3) can 4 years of history actually be tested through both oral and written tests? There are other questions that I think need to be answered such as: Can the History Department demand a comprehensive examination, and if so, what authority is delegated to the Department to administer these tests. Since history is taught in segments such as American History, English History, European History, etc., why aren't there courses taught in synthesizing these courses, only for our academic not benefit, but for preparing for the comps as well. At last years meeting I was impressed by a plan suggested by one of the professors whereby the comp could be considered a course with due credit given. He mentioned that a plan similar to this was used at a school that he taught at previously. Another possible solution would be to have the comp made optional and those students who decided to take the comp would receive academic credit.

This year the History Department has taken steps to brief and prepare students for the comp by calling weekly meetings to discuss topics ranging from term papers (evidently there are a sizable number of us who can't write term papers, aren't there?) to graduate school preparation. As to the effectiveness of these meetings, I can't give a personal comment due to the fact I've been unable to attend the meetings last semester. I will be in attendance this semester. Although I didn't attend last semester's meetings I understand from students who were present that the meetings are more along the lines of a tea party than a genuine attempt to prepare us for the comps, graduate school, term paper research, etc.

Interested students for Challenging the History Comprehensives can contact James T. Davis after 6:00 p.m. – Phone 272-8373. After the protest meeting last year one professor came up to me and said "what's the problem – you should have no problem passing the comp?" Obviously he was oblivious to the whole nature of our displeasure with the comp. Even though the battle is monumental as long as there's a little flicker in the fire there's hope ...

Contrary to the notice in last week's GUILFORD-IAN, the PIPER, literary magazine of Guilford College, does need poetry, short stories, essays and art for a Spring issue. An unfortunate typographical error, stating the PIPER doesn't need material was all wrong. All works should be submitted by next Wednesday, February 23 to Daniel Rumfelt, English 16 or Cox 224. Preferably manuscripts should be typed.

Preyer's School Plan Considered

A plan for school desegregation formulated by Greensboro Congressman Richard Preyer and Alexander Bickel is under consideration by President Nixon and his staff.

The President's press secretary, Ron Ziegler said that the previous problem has been discussed with Bickel, a Yale professor, in conjunction with the top level conference on busing being held at the White House.

The Bickel-Preyer plan calls for racial balance in school districts. If, however, a district is not deliberately remaining all black or white and makes attempts to end racial isolation, it can have a predominance of one race.

Nominee

A buffet dinner honoring Pat Taylor, candidate for Democratic nomination for Governor, will be held Monday, February 21st 7 p.m. at the Barn Dinner Theatre.

The local committee supporting Pat Taylor is sponsoring the dinner for students. Forty tickets at $1.00 each have been allotted to Guilford College. Students may purchase these tickets from William Carroll in Archdale 215. A similar amendment, sponsored by Preyer with Sen. Spong, D-Va., died in committee. Liberals charge it was to create neighborhood schools, and conservatives said too much integration would be the result.

Telephone Penalities

Recent changes in the North Carolina Telephone Fraud Laws have raised the penalty for fraud to a maximum $500 fine and/or 6 month jail sentence for each incident of telephone misuse.

The new laws replace previous ones which considered several incidents as one violation.

An investigator for Southern Bell Telephone Company pointed out the new penalties while visiting Guilford recently. Six cases of fraud are currently under investigation here.

Telephone fraud covers tampering with the telephone system as well as fraudulent use of telephone credit cards. Persons who receive fraudulent calls and refuse to cooperate with investigators are now subject to subpoena.
