CRY ME A RIVER

by Steve Beals

They thought the students had gone wild at Guilford College on Wednesday. The first floor of New Garden was filled with tear gas and weeping women were standing in front of the building. A man rushed in wearing a gas mask.

It wasn't a revolt, just an accident. The safe in the building is equipped with a protective device which unleashes a potent amount of tear gas when opened. It was tested Wednesday, though not exactly in the manner specified by the manufacturer. The staffs of the Business and Registrar's Office are convinced that it works.

The Facts Behind the Coup

Bloodmobile Visits Campus

By Joseph Freund

On October 2, 1973, The American National Red Cross Bloodmobile pitched camp in Milner's Lobby to extract one pint donations from healthy donors. They began collecting at 10:30 and by 5:00PM had obtained 126 pints of fresh red blood which has the equivalent of one keg of beer. Among the healthy donors, 76 Guilford College students were first time donors. By the way, it should be noted, not all of us are exceptable, for 23 students or maybe professors were rejected. The amount of donors by dorms is as follows: Mary Hobbs 22, English 20, Bryan 24, Milner 33, Shore 12, and Binford 15. The Bloodmobile shall return sometime in the near future so prepare; flex those veins and await the reentry of the long, sharp needle.

Friends of democracy everywhere were disappointed to hear of the violent military coup which took place in Chile on September 13. During the first few days the new military regime imposed rigid censorship. Only approved news copy was allowed to leave the country. These "official" versions were widely circulated with accounts describing limited bloodshed and few arrests. The U.S. government admitted prior knowledge but denied masterminding the operation, although they wasted less than one week before granting official recognition.

Biophile Club

On September 23rd, ten intrepid Biophilers and nineteen skeptical ("My momma told me I couldn't climb mountains.") city kids set off to discover the Great Outdoors at Hanging Rock State Park.
