Guilford College Natural Foods Buying Collective

John Margiot

The Guilford College Natural Foods Buying Collective is now functioning. The collective was formed in response to a growing concern and need of the college community. Food prices are out of control, weekly grocery bills are becoming oppressive for the average family. We are getting continually lower returns on our dollars both in quantity and nutritional value. In response to the food situation more and more people are turning back to natural foods (whole grains & dried beans etc.) for low cost high nutrition meals. As a non-profit organization the collective is able to make a wide variety of natural foods available to members at a considerable reduction in price. At the same time we are able to maintain a high quality level in all items.

The collective is operating out of a storage room located in the basement of Mary Hobbs Hall (thanks to the Hobbs women). The working structure is cooperative. All members will be required to contribute a couple hours of labor each month or two as needed. A membership fee becomes necessary as we

DRUG ACTION

HERE & THERE

A Statement Adopted by the Faculty Expressing Concern Over the Use of Drugs on Campus

The Faculty of Guilford College is concerned that there have been instances of improper and/or unlawful use of drugs on campus. The Faculty is concerned with creating a community that provides for the practice of individual freedom and a community free from any influence or thing destructive of the best within the individual or the best within the group. We hold that the improper use of drugs is destructive.

We are further concerned that some students fail to understand or casually disregard the serious consequences of excessive or unlawful use of drugs. All persons must clearly understand that the College is not a sanctuary from the law.

FEDERAL COURT ASKED TO DECLARE POT LAWS UNCONSTITUTIONAL

(CPS)--A civil suit challenging the constitutionality of the nation's marijuana laws was filed October 10 in Federal Court in Washington, D.C.

Brought by the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws (NORML), a Washington-based non-profit public interest group, the suit will be argued by former US Attorney General Ramsey Clark, a member of NORML's Advisory Board.

The court is being asked by NORML's suit to declare that laws prohibiting the private possession and use of marijuana violate an individual's right of privacy and other express guarantees of the US Constitution.

Additionally named as a plaintiff in the suit is a class of persons consisting of all present adult users of marijuana in the District of Columbia, estimated in the complaint to number 40,000 persons.
