Student Activities Budget Proposed

by David Green

The Senate Budgetary Committee held a hearing for budget requests from leaders of student organizations Wednesday, April 9th. The committee, chaired by Senate Vice-President Cindy Buxton, is responsible for the allocation of Student Activities funds.

Only one organization, the Quaker Guilford's yearbook, received the full amount requested. Eighteen other organizations budgets were cut, some by more than 50%. The Committee was working with a projected $56,100 compared to the $66,300 available during the 1974-75 school year. The decrease in available funds is due to an expected decline in enrollment.

The Student Activities fund is financed by a $66 per student tuition charge.

After each organization presented its budget request, the floor was opened to debate concerning allocations. The center of controversy was the reduction of the B.A.S.I.B. budget from a requested $3,300 to a proposed allocation of $1,500. The International Relations Club, WQFS, and the Guilfordian representatives all raised questions about their abilities to continue present services if forced to sustain serious budget cuts.

History Professor Edward Burrows

Burrows, Zweigenhaft Receive Excellence Awards

Edward Burrows, professor in the History Department, and Richard Zweigenhaft, assistant professor of Psychology, were nominated by the Board of Visitors to receive the initial Excellence in Teaching Awards.

The awards, two $500 cash grants, are given by the Board of Visitors to encourage Guilford's faculty in continued professional growth and teaching skills development.

Nominations were solicited by secret ballot from the students, faculty, and staff last Wednesday. 322 ballots were cast in which 65 faculty members received nominations. The Selection Committee, named by the Board of Visitors, included representation from the students, college administration, and Board of Visitors. Meeting last Thursday, it received the tabulation of votes, which was a major factor in their final selection. Other criteria included: capacity to challenge students to work productively and creatively; commitment to total college program and campus community life; capacity to develop good relationships with students both in and outside the classroom.

A judgement of nominees fulfillment of such criteria was based on the comments solicited on the ballots by the nominators in support of their nominees.

In support of Ed Burrows' nomination such comments as these were made: "Ed Burrows puts his soul into his teaching and every student he teaches benefits." "He cares about the college." "He really makes an extraordinary effort to understand, teach, and aid all students he comes into contact with." "He probably spends more time helping and encouraging more students than any other faculty member."

Comments on the ballots supporting Richie Zweigenhaft's nomination included: "Excellent teaching, very informative, interesting lectures and discussions - easy to relate to - really looked forward to going to his classes." "He relates well with students, he doesn't preach in his class, he shares." "I doubt I have ever had a more interesting course than his Personality Adjustment. He can really make the subject come alive so that studying and learning the material is a pleasure."

The awards are to be presented as a part of the Commencement exercises on May 10th. The recipients have the discretion to use the awards in any way that will enhance their teaching skills or to undertake special projects with their classes.
