are seen as opportunities for good, as occasions to share joy. Jesus healed everything - physical afflictions, emotion wounds, spiritual emptiness. Jesus could do this because He had faith. He knew where and from Whom He came. He believed in God so totally, that all He did was God's Will and God's Will was all He did.

It would be difficult for us to hold such a faith as Jesus did. I do not have it and I know of none who have since Jesus. My lack of total commitment and faith does not thwart me from trying. My faith in God and God's faithfulness to me in my times of need have given me a solid foundation to stand on. With a foundation so certain, I have the confidence to move in uncertain directions, to take on challenges that hold unpredictable outcomes, to stand firm in the face of opinions that are contrary to God-revealed truths, to be available to another in a time of weakness, and, I have the confidence to admit my own weaknesses, to do so and know that God still loves and accepts me.

Faith and trust in God imply a commitment, a commitment that is not easy to make, but one that gives freedoms heretofore unknown. The same commitment will not leave you where you are at, it will take you in new areas, whether they be new ways of dealing with familiar people or new parts of the world (the former is the hardest). Jesus' commitment took Him to the cross. By it He conquered death and gave us that same opportunity. He gave us a new freedom - freedom from the fear of dying. If you want these same freedoms, or other freedoms that I have not mentioned but that also exist for you, you need to make a commitment to trust God. Only you can make that commitment.

Art Seminar

Next we visit Robert Tillotson at his Soho warehouse loft. Mr. Tillotson, a one-time student at UNC-G, was most informative as to what makes the professional artist tick. His paintings portray the masquerade so many people assume and show a type of biting humor derived only when one can laugh at oneself.

The end of Friday saw a visit by some to the World Trade Center. Situated at the tip of Lower Manhattan these twin 110-story towers are colossal. They are totally out of proportion to anything else. Human beings turn into Barbie and Ken dolls inside, overwhelmed by the sheer vastness of the interior. One sense of scale is shattered. The use of glass, chrome, stainless steel and white stone gives off an aura of aloof frigidity having no care of people. Staying in that building longer than is necessary becomes a soul-rending torture. Nobody talks; everybody walks like lemmings to the subway. A twentieth century Tower of Babel, the World Trade Center is an obscene gesture to all who view it. If this be the future Lord help us, for the effects that place has on the people who work there every day must be quite strange indeed.

Saturday was a free day and members of the seminar took the time to revisit museums, to show and to just goof off. Saturday night was Saturday night. Nuff said. Sunday morning dawned and we packed and left amidst the silence that New York City knows only on Sunday morning. We said good-bye to all the treasures and horrors of New York and, 12 hours later at the end of a setting sun said hello to the quiet of the Guilford campus that was a welcome sight for all.
