

Helen Hole concludes visit

By Mary Busken
Staff Writer

Mrs. Helen Hole, Guilford College's distinguished Quaker visitor, led a thought provoking discussion on Quaker values and ideals Tuesday night, September 25.

Despite the cold, unseasonal weather, Mrs. Hole, is experiencing a pleasant stay here at Guilford. Her official two week visit includes meetings with students and faculty, attending classes, and lectures on Quakerism.

A Quaker by birthright, Mrs. Hole was born in Philadelphia and spent her childhood in New York City. She attended Vassar College and received her B.A. from Columbia University.

She then taught at the Earlham College School of Religion until her retirement in 1972. At the remarkable age of 63, she attained her Ph.D. in literature from Indiana University, as one of her friends put it, "just for the fun of it."

Now in her retirement, Mrs. Hole models her year after the basic three term school structure.

She spends one term teaching at either Earlham or Pendle Hill colleges, one term researching and writing on subjects concerning Quakerism, and one term "Quakerizing," which involves visiting Quaker schools to deliver speeches and to meet with students. Following this hectic schedule, she relaxes in New Hampshire during the summer months.

Mrs. Hole's overall reaction to Guilford during her visit takes on an optimistic quality. "I have found Guilford to be a very pleasant, open, hospitable place interested in Quakerism."

A four year member of the Guilford Board of Trustees, she stresses that the college is not aiming to "make Quakers out of the students," but merely interested in exposing them to Quaker ideas through Quaker lifestyle.

One aspect she finds pleasing at Guilford is the openness between students and faculty. She maintains that if this one-to-one relationship fails to exist, the the college becomes too "busy" and is subject to easily losing other important values.

Similarly, Mrs. Hole is impressed by the high quality of the faculty and staff at Guilford.

Although her stay officially ends on the 28th, Mrs. Hole plans to remain at Guilford through Christmas to conduct some research. Her presence at Guilford has clearly been a profitable experience for both her and the students.

Helen Hole plans to extend her stay at Guilford unofficially in order to continue research.

Rain dampens intramural plans

By Marge Komacek

Intramural representatives should note that the deadline for volleyball sign-ups has been extended to Tuesday, October 9, at 4 p.m. Each unit representative must pick up two sign up sheets for each team within his unit.

These sheets can be found at the Information desk in Founders. Please initial at the desk that you have picked them up.

It is suggested that one sheet be posted in the dorm for sign-ups and to let other students know who is on their team.

The other sheet should also list the same names and should be turned into Mrs. Clark by the stated deadline. Co-operation would be greatly appreciated.

Last week's rain did dampen some intramural activities but did not wipe them out completely. In the future, scheduled games will be played if at all possible.

Team captains or unit representatives are responsible for finding out whether a game will be cancelled because of rain. Rained out tennis matches will be made up at the end of the season.

Keep reading the Guilfordian for a sports update.
