

France in the summertime

By Roger Lifson

Although it might not be Paris in the springtime, Guilford is offering a Summer School in the land of Monet and de Gaulle. Professor James McNab, chairperson of Foreign Languages at Guilford College; and Professor Kathleen Bulgin of UNC-G, will be the leaders of the 1980 Summer School to France.

The two courses being taught are "A Nous Deux Maintenant: Paris in Context", and "French Conversation". Instead of trying to teach a course on French Civilization from the beginning, McNab has devised "Paris in Context".

This course will focus on Paris; its trends and culture. The beauty of the course is that when a discussion of a particular artists' influence has been studied in the morning class, the group can go see the artists' work in the afternoon.

Emphasis of the course is to immediately experience what has been taught. Although the focus will be on Paris, the side trips will be related back to the Paris experience.

"French Conversation" is designed to teach practical French. A fair amount of listening and speaking will be required. All students should have at least two semesters of College French before considering this trip abroad. All classes will be held in French, except for the guest speakers who will be speaking in English.

Due to the success of the previous trips to France, there have been several good contacts made with hotels and people. There is a certain continuity that is assured to make this trip a smoothly run program.

The group will depart from New York on May 22, and stay in Paris until June 20. From June 20-27 the group will be in the Loire Valley; from June 27 until July 4, the group will stay in Nice. July 4-26 is scheduled for independent travel. The group will meet in Paris on July 26 and then depart for New York. Since the group will be on independent travel on July 14, nothing is planned for Bastille Day.

The group will be staying in a "pension", which is a private boarding house. Since 1970, the summer schools have been staying in this "pension" which is located on the left bank of Paris.

McNab has lived in France and taught at the University of Nice. His enthusiasm for his summer program guarantees a rewarding experience.

Cost of the trip will be $1,695. For information, contact McNab in Duke 301, or The Center for Off Campus Education which is located in Frazier Apt. 21.

In the tradition of Summer School Abroad, Jim McNabb and Kathleen Pulgin will lead an exciting study which will include a week in Nice.
