Network Now In Progress

By MOIRA TAYLOR

A new addition has been made to Guilford's Career Library. This library, located in the Student Services Office, now contains an Alumni Career Network, a bound series of Alumni career information established from questionnaire responses. The network provides students with the chance to explore and open new possibilities to their major and possible career goals.

Recruiting at Guilford, because it is such a small school, is very limited; in this respect Jim Keith, Associate Dean of Students, felt that seniors, in addition to underclassmen, needed “better avenues of access for recruiting,” and therefore created the network idea. Working with the Alumni Board, who approved the idea, Keith sent out questionnaires to alumni requesting information regarding their major, their work experience, any additional education or attempted degrees and the extent to which an alumni would be willing to help a current Guilford student. Possible aid ranged from providing a student with personal information offering temporary housing to recent graduates.

In addition to the concern over the lack of campus recruiting, Keith also feels students need to learn to plan their future; the network is yet another tool, in addition to the wide number of existing opportunities, available to help students plan ahead. Through any number of means, for instance a number of internships, students can use “effective planning and test or prove realistic career goals.” Keith encourages students, with or without majors, to plan for their future.

Using the network is very simple. It is available for student use anytime during regular Student Service Office hours. If you don't know where the career library is, anyone in the office will be glad to show you. The network consists of the questionnaire responses, categorized by majors. All of Guilford's current majors are represented in the network. The names of alumni are not disclosed on the actual sheet, but each survey has a career code as its distinguishing factor. Once a student has obtained the codes pertaining to their field of interest, he/she must go through a brief screening with Keith, who will under most circumstances release the name and contact number for that individual.

Although an alumni has agreed to help, students must approach the person, once the name is disclosed, with courtesy, says Keith. “They (alumni) want to be helpful but they are also busy people. Students should not ask too much or ask more than that person has indicated they will do,” says Keith.

Over 250 alumni have responded to the network, with a great majority from the Washington D.C. area, the most active alumni group short of Greensboro. Keith hopes the network will build up to as large as 1000 people with current pushes in the most populated alumni areas.
