Senator Elections Sept. 8

Officers gear up for a busy year

Cory Birdwhistell

Staff Writer

The campaign is in full swing for the Sept. 8 Community Senate elections, and before the ballots have even been cast the Executive Council and Steering Committee are busy planning the agenda for the new year.

"I'm extremely excited about this year," exclaims Senate President Rich Ewell, "We have one of the best group of student leaders in memory—from the Union all the way down club lines, they are creative people who have proven their dedication."

First-year students have been especially encouraged to run for Senate. Ewell explains, "It is a great place for them to work with people they wouldn't ordinarily meet, to be informed about college issues, to have a major say on policy and to hopefully have fun, too. We're here to make it happen!"

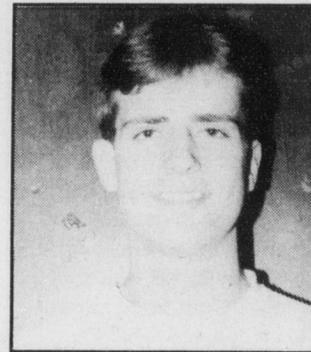

According to Ewell, Guilford students should vote for candidates who articulate and listen well, are creative problem-solvers, have the ability to both express their own opinions and those of their constituency and are pro-active, open, respectful and dedicated.

Senate priorities for this fall include: creating a statement which describes Guilford's uniqueness as related to the Quaker presence, responding to social life concerns by re-visiting the drinking policy and upgrading the career development center. The first Senate meeting is Sept. 14 in Boren Lounge.

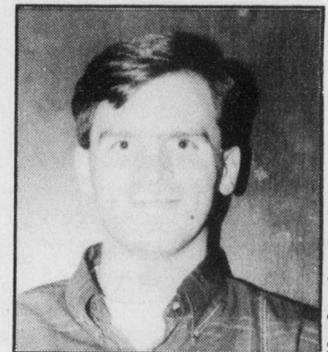

The Senate leadership, which consists of Ewell, Vice President Chris Behm, Treasurer Brian Burton and Secretary Terrance Laster, is fulfilling some of its campaign promises from last spring. They are working to make Senate more accessible by organizing the Senate offices and encouraging their use, are attempting to arrange the historically unorganized Senate records and are encouraging interaction between groups on campus by planning a student organization retreat to Hanging Rock.

Ewell does not expect the problems of last year, such as surprise resignations, to occur. He explains that the members of the Executive Council have Senate experience. "We know what we're getting into," he laughs, "and I plan not to resign!"

Kannenberg Joins Guilford

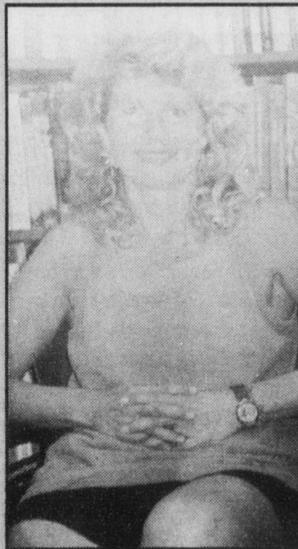

Alison Amis

Staff Writer

After traveling and teaching in Europe and Asia, Dr. Catherine Kannenberg has joined the Guilford community this fall by accepting the job as the college's newest psychology professor.

She brings to Guilford experience in teaching in a variety of atmospheres and also a global perspective. In reflecting on her first impressions of Guilford and its students, Catherine's opinions were highly favorable.

"Guilford students are the brightest and most interesting (that) I've ever come across. The college has a definite character

Scholarship Search Deadline Approaching

Daphne Lewis

Co-Editor in Chief

The financial aid department is now offering the Scholarship Search service for the 1995-1996 year. However, it is imperative that students interested apply before October 1994.

"Many of the deadlines for the private scholarships are fairly early in the year, so the sooner you apply, the better," said Dana Dooley, financial aid administrator.

The Scholarship Search is a database that matches a student's background and extra-curricular activities to thousands of potential sources of grant and scholarship money funded by foundations, unions, and organizations, according to Anthony Gurley, director of financial aid.

In exchange for the $10 fee, the student will get three things in return: a letter listing any potential matches, a summary of each of those matches including information and addresses of the scholarship donor, and a draft letter to use as a model for writing potential sources.

It takes the financial aid department only a few days after the student turns in their application to get information back to the student, said Dooley.

According to Gurley, the money that students receive from the service will not be subtracted from their financial assistance at Guilford. Any scholarship or grant money acquired this way will be used in the place of any self-help money, which includes loans and work-study.

The financial aid department is also offering this service to high school seniors in the area, regardless of whether or not they are planning to attend Guilford.

Students can pick up applications in the financial aid department, which is located on the second floor of New Garden Hall.
