

Guilford prepares for McNemar's day

"The best possible celebration of the college."

That's what Gordon Soenksen, vice-president of institutional advancement, heralded the upcoming inauguration of Don McNemar on Friday, October 11 to be. The inauguration is intended to celebrate Guilford College, the traditions of the college, and the best decision the trustees of the college ever made," said Soenksen.

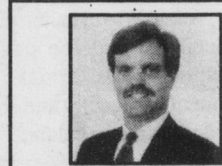

The decision, announced last year, made Donald W. McNemar the seventh president of Guilford College. Don and his wife, Britta, who came to the college from Phillips Andover Academy, were central in the planning of the inauguration. "Their dream for the inauguration was to celebrate the college, while keeping with its traditions, and to be totally inclusive," noted Soenksen.

And inclusive the inauguration will be. The Inauguration Board, which started last spring, "has made valiant efforts to be clear with all aspects of the inner and outer communities that (Guilford College) interacts with that everyone is welcome and wanted during this inauguration," said Kelly Davis.

Falling on the first day of Homecoming weekend, the event promises to include alumni as well. "This date offered (the Board) the opportunity to invite alumni from all of the classes up to the Class of 2000 to be present in the march of delegates during the ceremony," said Soenksen. The date will offer the college to celebrate as the Guilford College family.

Not only will the inauguration offer itself as a celebration for the college family, but also the Quaker family. Soenksen reported that all 89 Friends Meetings in North Carolina have been invited to participate in the worship service on Sunday.

"We want every student to feel welcome, and want every student to attend [the inauguration]."

- Gordon Soenksen, vice president of institutional advancement

The ultimate goal of this event, say both Soenksen and Davis, is to offer an opportunity for the entire Guilford College community to come and celebrate.

This includes students as well. "We want every student to feel welcome, and want every student to attend," urged Soenksen.

Davis offered his advice to the student body. "We owe it to ourselves to celebrate the good things that we do here. (The inauguration) will allow the students to enjoy all of the positive things that happen in our lives here at Guilford."
