

Recycling program in need of student support

"Drink your beer, before you recycle the bottle!" exclaimed First-Year Bonner Lisa Lundeen, after she had been doused by half a bottle of beer left in a Mary Hobbs recycling bin.

Spilled beer is not the worst according to founder and organizer Tony Stark. The worst is that ROCK, Recycling at Guilford Kounts, has faded since it bounced onto campus November 24, 1996.

On that first Sunday 30 people appeared at 2:30 in front of Founders to collect recycling bags placed outside dorm rooms. But more recently ROCK has numbered two people, founder and organizer Tony Stark and First-Year Eva Paige. When two people collect all the recycling for all the dorms on the entire campus, it takes more than an hour of work.

ROCK was created when Elgina Manuel connected Bonner Tony Stark with SRC co-chair Allie Randall. SRC had been discussing ways to recycle when Allie Randall had the idea to link Bonners, who need to fulfil 150 hours of community service, with the practically dead recycling program.

Some Bonners showed up but the recycling collectors have mainly been other interested students. Unfortunately, the number of participants plummeted as Guilford stress attacked. This has left only a few people to pick up about a hundred bags of recycling from all the dorms, the Apartments, and alternative housing.

The program has been slow to start this semester. Last weekend seven people did the recycling but a few floors in Milner were missed.

Despite the troubles ROCK is facing, Tony Stark and Eva Paige remain undauntingly optimistic. Eva focuses on the positive aspect of collecting Guilford recycling: "It's fun to talk with Tony." Tony meanwhile declares that he will simply not let ROCK fail.
