really lacking."

She points out the benefits of having a variety of viewpoints in a department, especially a subject like political science. When Professor Bill Schmickle retires at the end of the year, there will be only two political science professors at Guilford.

The sports studies, soan, and JPS departments need or will need replacements for faculty members. Two psychology professors have asked to work part-time, meaning that that department also needs a new member.

The Clerks' committee will reassess the situation after the task forces turn in reports. Wayman said, "We are committed to meeting the needs of the students." In the meantime, several departments have continued to search for new members. If the committee determines that there is still a need for the new faculty, the departments should be ready to hire new professors fairly quickly.

committee submitted a brief to the Administrative Council outlining a future full-time position. "The next time this position is open, we will try and advance it to, a full-time position. We're on that path."

Still, many people think that Guilford cannot achieve the diversity they strive for if Owens' former position is not made full-time.

"I wouldn't come here as an undergraduate," said Rob Owens. "I would have looked at it and said 'it's nice, it's small, it's friendly, but how can I thrive here?' A lot of my students come to me and say 'I'm surviving Guilford.' It shouldn't have to be that way. Students, all students, should be able to thrive at college."

Olds praised the job that Owens has done. "It's always very labor-intensive to start a program, and that is especially difficult if it is only one-third of your job description. He's done it well. The next person in the position will greatly benefit because of Rob's trailblazing."
