Flea market helps Pakistan

By Elaine Kellogg
STAFF WRITER

Friendly music and the smell of home-baked cookies invited students onto the lawn in front of Founders for the Pakistan Flood Relief Flea Market on Sept. 22. The event was everything that the name implies: a fundraiser for flood victims that doubled as a market for affordable second-hand goods.

Prior to the event, the Guilford Peace Society (GPS) went door-to-door down the campus's residence halls in search of donations for their member-run flea market. The student response was overwhelmingly positive.

"We got a lot more things than anticipated," said GPS President and junior Sarah Stangl.

White privilege series opening ignites discourse

By Terah Kelleher
STAFF WRITER

The Multicultural Education Department, the Center for Principled Problem Solving, and a Guilford College senior collaborated to form a dynamic series of films and events centered on the subject of racial justice. One of the goals: to confront a subject that can make white people squirm in their seats.

On Sept. 22, the series "Unmasking Whiteness: Exploring White Privilege" began with its first film, "Mirrors of Privilege." This video shared the stories of white men and women who have taken on the challenge of confronting the subject of racial injustice and white privilege.

Rain, ties dampen Quaker season

By Dan Etter
STAFF WRITER

The men's soccer team battled the Wasps of Emory and Henry College to a 1-1 draw under a cold, steady rain at the Armfield Athletic Center on Sept. 29. The tie moves the Quakers to 1-1-1 in conference play, with a 5-3-2 overall record.

"This is a heart check for all of you," Head Coach Jeffrey Bateson told the team at half time after going down a goal with just 14 seconds left before the break. "You all know you're skillful enough to play the game, every single one of you, but it's not just about talent. It doesn't have to be pretty guys. It's a heart and gut check now and it's about how hard you play."

The tie was the Quakers' second in three games, with
