TIDES TURN IN CLUB WAR

Yachting and Underwater Basket Weaving clubs fight over landmark lagoon

Two clubs enter. One club leaves.
The Underwater Basketweaving Club, soon to celebrate its two-year anniversary, was built to be a community of peaceful, marine hobbyists. To date, the group has created hundreds of waterproof baskets and donated over $5,000 to local charities.

The Yachting Club, on the other hand, has been around since the dawn of the college itself. They are now in control of over 200 yachts, 73 warships, 26 submarines and one sailboat. The Yachting Club is known for its annual charity banquet, during which they donate yachts to children in need.

That is, until recently.

"For the last few years, the weavers and the yachters have shared the lake," said Underwater Basketweaving Head Weaver and senior Julia Nickels. "But everything changed when the Yachting Club attacked."

Kent's Apology Letter

Soon to be former president Kent Chabotar comes clean. From abysmally low faculty salaries to a condescending tone when addressing students, Kent apologizes for it all.
