On Wednesday, Sept. 10, Guilford College students kicked off this year's Consent Campaign with a kiss, some much-needed education and a whole lot of free t-shirts.

"(The Consent is Sexy campaign kickoff fair is about) putting less focus on victim blaming and more on treating consent as a positive communication between people who want to be intimate," said Kristie Wyatt '08, wellness education coordinator and community director for Shore Hall, English Hall and Pope House, to students gathered on the patio of Founders Hall as the fair began.

Students had the opportunity to participate in activities ranging from painting each other with body paint after asking for consent to putting lipstick on, puckering up and kissing a poster which read "I love consent."

No matter the activity, the focus remained
