

HAT BURNING

"Love-sick Juniors, you've listened to this sad review,
Love-sick Juniors we bring you counsel true,
Not every day means sorrow;
Just hope until tomorrow,
Lovesick Juniors, we bring you counsel true.

Foolish maidens, we bring you counsel true,

Foolish maidens, we bring you counsel true,

Folly will deceive you
But wisdom joy will give you,
Foolish maidens we bring you counsel true."

And ever as they danced one maiden, then another cast her gayly colored cap and gown into the flames until all stood robed in spotless white.

Lo, as they sang, there came a gallant band, knights bearing caps and gowns of black, the emblem of Sir Wisdom's train.

Quoth Sir Wisdom, "Now don these symbols that are Wisdom's, ladies fair,

But think well ere you take them for they bring you toil and care,

And labor where it's needed and reward for work well done.

Whenever they are worn a life of service is begun."

Eke as soon as he had spoke these words, he took the noble lady by the hand, robed her in gown of black, and led her to the regal throne where sat the lord of all this land. Kneeling there she received the cap emblem of knowledge and of service true. Fain would I tell how each knight led a lady fair unto the king's own throne. Suffice it to say that all were clad alike in black.

Well spoke she who said, "The old order changeth yielding place to new and so do we in humble reverence assume the symbols and the duties of our seniorhood."

Up rose the liege lord of this land, Rondthaler is his name, and thus he spoke, "Many and many a band of maids has come unto this court, nor ever yet has been one so true of purpose, so dignified of mien. Each band has its genius, all great, but none greater than your own. Thrice welcome are you here. I would have you aye remember this, Honor comes not from cap and gown nor any idle show but from a life of service and of love."

Then sang the maidens this song:
Our Senior robes are symbols of the armor,

With which we gird ourselves for victory.

Proudly we don them;
Humbly will we wear them,

Conscious their meaning is world loyalty."

Last of all they sang, "Blessed Alma Mater." Thus with song and noble speech, celebrated their arrival in the court of Wisdom's lord.
