Mrs. Summers, Alumna Of Salem Dies In Baltimore

Present and former Salem students will learn with deep sorrow of the death of Mrs. C. L. Summers, nee Bessie Hall, a devoted alumna who died in Baltimore, Md., September 26. During her residence in Baltimore she was the central figure and inspiration of the Salem alumnae of that city.

Mrs. Summers was influential in establishing at the University of Maryland a clinic for the relief of babies and children, and as president of the Woman's Auxiliary of this institution had brought much of medical science into the service of the clinic, and now, as many as eight thousand children are treated yearly by the clinic, due to her unerring interest and leadership.

HOME ECONOMICS CLUB MEETS TUESDAY, SEPT 28

ner House," an old house built in 1825 and standing to the east of Salem. Also a "Steady of Gables" is worthy of note being a group of the houses from the older part of Salem. His most interesting picture, however, is the one showing South Hall, West Gate Archway, the Sister's House and adjoining buildings as seen from the east. This painting is interesting both for its association with Salem College and for its contrasting colors and architecture.

A collection of Mr. Mattison's paintings is being exhibited this week at Shepherd's Art Shop on Fourth street.

Athletic Announcements

For the first time in the history of Salem College the work in Physical Education is being carried on by the director, Miss Atkinson, with the aid of two student assistants, Dorothy Frazier, senior, and Lilyan Newell, junior. Both students are capable of filling the place, and will be well prepared to take the responsibility. The Physical Education department feels that it is fortunate in having two such persons for the first trial of this experiment.

At present four sports are being carried on. They are, basketball, which is a major sport, tennis, swimming, and hiking. Basketball practice began on Tuesday of this week, and Miss Atkinson states that she is well pleased with the spirit of enthusiasm that is being shown for this sport. She is also pleased with the types of playing material that have answered the first call, and feels certain that everything points towards a good season this year. There are vacancies to be filled, however, and the girls are urged to fill these with the vacancies are still in the elementary stages. Day students are reminded that they are eligible for teams, and are urged to come out. Miss Atkinson, who will be the head coach, has been for the past four years at the University of North Carolina, where she was very successful in her work with the coeds. Practices are held every Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday for freshmen at 3:30, and for the upper-classes at 4:30. Surely everyone can find it convenient to come out to at least two of these.

Miss Atkinson wishes to remind the students that the tennis courts have been worked over, and are now in good playing condition. It is just the kind of weather to play tennis, so everybody play while the weather is suitable.

If the fall weather continues, the swimming season will soon be closed with a swimming meet, but this, however, is entirely dependent on the weather. The pool is open regular hours at present, and everyone is invited to come out and get in good shape for the meet.

DEAN SHIRLEY SPEAKS OF HIS EXPERIENCES

seeing the King and Queen of Italy when he attended opera. The king, he described as a very ordinary looking man, and the queen as a motherly looking woman. After seeing the pope, the king, and the queen, he wanted to see Mussolini. One morning on the street some one whispered to him that Mussolini was passing. Instantly the street was filled with military men while a closed carriage dashed by at a high rate of speed. In one corner of the carriage, the figure of a man could be seen. This manner of passing through the street, Dean Shirley said, led him to believe that Mussolini is not quite so brave a man as he boasts.

The students and visitors who heard Dean Shirley's talk enjoyed it thoroughly, and appreciated it as one of the most interesting chapel features.

INSPIRING CHAPEL TALKS ON HONOR

members of our own college groups, in other words, all contacts which come about in our every-day living.

"The other main field of student honor deals with life in the classroom. Quite naturally a girl brings into the college classroom the attitude which she had in high school. Unfortunately some of our high schools have not sufficiently emphasized the importance of individual responsibility in regard to work; consequently some students get the idea that anything they can put over is permissible. In other words, they shift the responsibility of their class-room conduct and of the preparation of their work in general, to other shoulders. These students feel that it is up to the teachers to catch them if they are copying somebody else's algebra paper or theme; otherwise, they should get by with it, as they would expect it. Their slogan is 'It's not what you do that gets you in trouble, but what you get caught in.'

"You new girls have already been at Salem long enough to realize that this sort of attitude is utterly out of place here. You have been told of the regulations necessary for dormitory life. Now, I want to explain briefly what we mean by class-room honor."

"In the first place, remember that you are given credit for doing your own work. A quiz paper, or an exam paper represents what you yourself have done. When you hand in a paper, the instructor in charge assumes that it is your paper. Unfortunately, every year three or four girls who do not appreciate this confidence. When you sign your name to a paper, feel that it is the same as if you were signing a check. Your name stands for something—if you sign it to a paper which is not rightfully yours, you are dishonoring your name. Your name on a paper, or a quiz, or a paper prepared out of class, an exam, means that you are handing in your work, and only yours. Any girl who fails to live up to this standard commits one of the greatest offenses possible, and she cannot be allowed to stay at Salem College.

"Remember, too, that class-room honor is also group honor. One of the most difficult phases of student government is the attitude of the innocent girl towards a girl who she knows is doing wrong. It is so easy to say, 'Well, I'm not cheating. If that other girl wants to cheat, let her try it.' But after all, that is cowardly. Student government does not mean tattling. It means that a girl, if she sees another girl cheating on a quiz or exam, should ask that girl to report herself. After all, isn't it more charitable to the girl than letting her go on forming dishonest habits which will grow worse and worse?

"And remember, the faculty are not policemen. We are here to teach you and to help you, but we are not here to brow-beat you, mentally or otherwise. We do not have faculty government here at Salem, we have student Government. Now, it is up to you, the student body, to make it a success."

ODDS AND ENDS

Dean Shirley's account of his almost seeing Mussolini reminds us of the time when he heard the noise of Lindbergh's plane, though the plane itself, including Colonel Lindbergh, was obscured by the clouds. We were in an exalted state of mind for the rest of the day, because of our close contact with the great man.

Speaking of Mussolini, a newspaper of recent date remarks that there is at least one individual in Italy who will not take him very seriously for some time to come, namely, the young Romano Mussolini. The stork is kept busy these days flying back and forth from one illustrious European family to another. We hope that his patronage in the higher circles won't turn his head, so that he will henceforth refuse to give his service to the bourgeoisie, not to speak of still lower social strata.

We read with extreme interest, that spiritualist experts in Paris are putting their pet spirits through a new set of antics. They declare that, through the agency of trained mediums, the ghosts can change the temperature of any room, can operate typewriters from a distance and can "walk" at any time during the day or night. This theory starts a train of reflection. Since these ghosts—we will call them that for want of a better name—can accomplish so many useful things, why not import a few to keep the temperature constant and moderate in every house or building. Not being visible, these ghosts could be at all in the way, and probably would not take up much space. How wonderful such an importation would have been during the first weeks of school when the mercury behaved so outrageously that we finally ignored it completely. We would also like to import a ghost who has studied typewriting into our editorial office. It would be an invaluable addition to the staff, especially if it could bring its own typewriter.

We were industriously employed in the library the other day, when a student entered and asked in loud tones where the library might be found. The book-lined walls and the heavy silence shrieked at her, but she was unabashed. Perhaps she may be excused on the score that she is used to nothing less than the Congressional Library at Washington, but in any event, her zeal for knowledge and learning has net up to this time been over-powering if it takes her two weeks to locate the college library.

United States Civil Service Examination

The United States Civil Service Commission announces the following open competitive examination: SENIOR AID IN LABORATORY TECHNIQUE

Applications for senior aid in laboratory technique must be on file with the Civil Service Commission at Washington, D. C., not later than November 12. The date for assembling of competitors will be stated on their admission cards, and will be about ten days after the close of receipt of applications.

The examination is to fill a vacancy in the Bureau of Entomology, Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., and vacancies occurring in positions requiring similar qualifications.

The entrance salary is $1,800 a year. A probationary period of six months is required; advancement after that depends upon individual efficiency, increased usefulness, and an occurrence of vacancies in higher positions.

The duties consist of the recognition and separation of different species of scale insects and placing same in sub-families, tribes and genera; the preparation of scale insects for study, including maceration and staining; and the preparation of analyses of morphological structures, including the proper citation of the various body sclerites.

Competitors will be rated on practical questions on biological laboratory methods.

Full information may be obtained from the United States Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C., or the secretary of the board of United States civil service examiners at the post office or custom-house in any city.
