

For Optional Training

Princeton, N. J. (By New Student Service)—An opponent of compulsory military training has been discovered by the Daily Princetonian in Captain Wardlaw Miles, formerly professor of English at Princeton, whose bravery during the war won for him the Congressional Medal.

"I am against compulsory military training in the colleges," said Captain Miles, "because I am not convinced that compulsory training is desirable for America in general, and because I am sure it would be a bad thing for the colleges in particular. Colleges ought to be places where young men go to satisfy intellectual curiosity. The less compulsory—except the compulsion to make intellectual slackers get out—the better."

"On the other hand, I am for optional military training in colleges because I am glad to believe there are a certain number of college men who want voluntarily to prepare themselves for war should it come."

New England Regional Magazine

Cambridge, Mass. (By New Student Service)—The first historical review of New England life and letters, "The New England Quarterly," has been established by five Harvard professors. They are S. E. Morison, professor of history; A. M. Schlesinger, professor of history; K. B. Murdock, professor of English; Professor Stanley Williams; and A. L. Mayo, assistant dean of the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences.

The magazine contains articles, documents, book reviews, and notes. Students, graduates, and others who have contributions bearing on New England life or letters may offer material. The purpose is explained by the editor as follows:

"We believe that New England, like the other sections of our country, has had in the past a well-defined provincial culture, and has made a distinctive contribution to American life, character and civilization. A quarterly journal, including within its scope the literary, social and economic history of New England, and the westward expansion of New England people, should first, meet a recognized need of scholars of history and literature, and, second, the rising generation of scholars in a field that needs cultivation. In the study of American literature many large problems and topics must wait for final treatment until the detailed studies upon which they must be based have been made. At present there is almost no opportunity for the publication of these studies. The colonial and revolutionary history of New England has been written largely from a narrowly antiquarian viewpoint; the history of New England thought and letters largely from a personal viewpoint, and the economic, social and political history of New England during the last hundred years has hardly been touched at all."

"I think you are a rotten actor." "Aw dry up! The only way you'll ever get on the stage will be to fall out of the balcony." —Buccaneer.

"It upsets me every time I run over a pedestrian." "I never have come across one that big." —Buccaneer.
