ON TO HARRISONBURG

About six o'clock Friday morning, October 29, there was a clanging of bells and hurrying hoofs of steel for the early morning ride of the gay excursionists to the Salem College hockey troop left town for battlements at Harrisonburg.

These steeds owned and trained by Miss Minnie Atkinson were all thoroughbreds and the "cream of the crop." They answer the names of "Shorty" Biles, Hazel Bradford, Anne Meister, Virginia Langley, Emily Mickey, "Jo" Walker, "Nub" Aitchinson, Alice Stough and Susan Calder.

Transportation was furnished by Miss Atkinson, Maude Hutehinson and Anne Meister.

The two hundred and forty mile drive in itself was worth the four week's practice. The route taken was through the Shenadoah Valley by way of North Carolina, Virginia, and Washington. The towns passed through were Martinsville, Va., Roanoke, Va., Staunton, Va., and Natural Bridge.

The troop arrived around two o'clock Friday afternoon; were land ed and lodged. The battles (as all good battles are) were uncertain as to the date and thus the exact information has not yet been received.

This meeting was an all sports occasion, attended by representatives from William and Mary, Sweet Briar, Mary Baldwin, Virginia State Teachers' College, Fredericksburg, Randolph-Macon, George Washington University, West Hamp ton and Hollins.

FINDING OURSELVES IS VESPER TOPIC

one can see that all people are fundamentally alike and one can find man's whole experience related in books. For that reason books are vital—they show life itself.

Another way of finding oneself is through knowing Personalities. This personality may be that of a teacher or of another student. "Personality influence helps us to find others who respond to us in a sense we belong to us."

In order to find oneself it is necessary to develop a Power of Perception, so that one may see through things, even to finding significance in trivialities. Often one sees only a mass of faces in a crowd but a sense of perception may help one to see a real depth of feeling in a face. One may find hopelessness, or futurity, or happiness where one least expects it, if a sense of perception is developed.

Closely allied to Perception is the Power of Enjoying Things. The life of everyone was meant to bring happiness. There are many ways of enjoying things. One way is through the sense of sight or hearing by means of which one may enjoy certain colors. A sunset would lose all its significance if one could not see the flame and gold of what the earth is doing to herself.

Everyone in the world is meant to do something. It is through abilities, whether one leads or helps in service, that one may find joy and find oneself. A leader, as well as a helper, must do what is right. Although all cannot lead, everyone can serve.

In finding oneself one must have a Purpose in Life, find something that is bigger than oneself. Everyone must find some reason for living, and something on which to lean. The biggest thing to hitch on to is to God.

William B. Yeats has written a poem which when interpreted as Miss Lilly has, gives this thought: "The years like great oen tread the world, and much is broken by their passing feet. Yet something remains, and that something can be nothing but oneself which has been developed by something bigger than oneself — God."

SALEM OF YEAR 1781 IS DEPICTED

their way from Virginia to South Carolina. The season was a quiet one after the soldiers had left, disturbed only by the political quarrels between the Whigs and the Tories.

Much excitement was furnished in October by the stealing of a cabbage head stolen by a boy of sixteen. He was called up before the Church Board, which pointed out gravely what he had done. As a punishment, he was not allowed to attend the communion services for a month because he had attended them without truly repenting. The man that was responsible for the boy's deed was forced to eat and live alone for a month in real exile, for one of the unpardonable sins was "to put somebody else up to doing wrong."

In this month too, plans had to be made for feeding and lodging the General Assembly that was to be held in November. On October 30, they heard of the victory at Yorktown, but they did not realize that the war was really over. The month closed with the death of the beloved Doctor. This left the community without any doctor whatsoever, except Dickinson, a medical student, and Bishop Graf, who knew little about medicine.

"We praise these sturdy ancestors of ours, and boast of their fortitude and industry," Miss Fries said in closing, "but I believe we had rather live in 1931, instead of 1781!"

In answer to the question, "How would you compare the Chinese students with our own?" Dr. McNeil Potat answered, "Much to their advantage, the applicants are rigidly examined, permitting only the highest type of students to enter the universities. As a result they are more alert, more serious minded and harder working than our own. But I think that, faced with a desperate economic situation, the young people of America are turning their minds to the vital problems of today."
