HAPPY APRIL FOOL

Seniors Entertain Frosh At Easter Egg Hunt

Stark Tragedy Occurs as Popular Child Stumbles

One of the most delightful entertainments which has been given this year was the Easter Egg Hunt which the Seniors gave for the Freshmen last Saturday afternoon. Each Senior had three Freshmen under her care, and with great delight showed them around the campus. The Seniors evidently had no trouble remembering where they had hid the eggs. They (the eggs, not the Seniors) were all quickly found. The Sophomores and Juniors, secretly envious, were hanging from the windows watching each move that was made by the happy children.

Little Margaret Wall was greatly pitted by the others when she let loose Babe's hand and fell, dropping her sucker and tearing her new blue hair ribbon. She received only a slight scratch on her left knee and is expected out of the infirmary sometime within the next few days.

Virginia Nall was awarded the $5 prize for finding the most eggs.

Sophomores Are Rated The Most Intellectual

Intelligence Tests' Results Prove Other Classes Morons

By recent intelligence tests given by Miss Foreman and Mr. McDonald, the Sophomore Class was rated the most intelligent class at Salem College. Those left behind are the Senior, Junior, and Freshman classes.

This announcement came as a complete surprise to many girls not in the famous Sophomore Class, but it was fully expected and approved of by the entire faculty. The class, on account of this remarkable rating, will be given Senior privileges beginning May 15, 1932.

Stupendous Crime Wave Sweeps Salem Campus

Dalton and Brooks Are First Suspected by Detectives

One of the most terrific crime waves that has ever been known since the establishment of Salem Female Academy in 1772 is now sweeping over the entire campus. As yet the Student Police Force has not been able to break up the ring of gangsters. The first case reported was that of Mary Brooks. Miss Barrow with her keen piercing eyes, noticed that Mary paid little attention in class and that she stared steadfastly at her feet which, due to the style to return to nature, were greatly exposed through the wide holes of her sandals and her toe-less hose. On investigation she found that Mary's toe-nails were painted a vivid bird red. When questioned, Mary gave no explanation. Further delving into the case proved that the toe-nails when thus painted served as mirrors, and instead of one reflection ten were provided by this novel method.

This crime seems to have direct association with names, for Mary Maynard was the next to be caught,—yes, caught in the act. She had a "Busy" strung up on her boudoir door, but a Student Council Detective, suspecting under-hand work, because of the supreme and prevailing quietness, entered to investigate. Much "top-toe" scheming has been going on.

Famous Football Star Discovered On Campus

Miss Sarah Graves Confirms Reports of Astounding Record

From the confessions made in her sleep, it has leaked out that Sarah Graves was a star football player during her high school career. While modesty is all right in its place, this star has, through pure ignorance, done herself and Salem an injustice by subduing her brutal strength and commanding football ways. Oh! How long Salem has suffered defeats just because a center forward of Graves' ability was lacking! Researchers found that this star's speed challenged that of "Red" Granger's when she started running toward the enemy's goal and that in every game she never made less than four touchdowns for the opposing team.

Sports' writers, although giving her credit for speed and clearness of direction, have criticized Miss Graves rather unjustly, we feel. Old papers show that sport writers even had the audacity to criticize her for allowing the enemy too many "kick-ins." Often it seems that she confused football with her minor sport, basketball, and ran with the ball the minute she got it in her hands, thus committing the most serious foul in football, that of "walking."

Of course, only a narrow-minded writer would criticize a player of Miss Graves' ability for confusing

Many Foolish Wishes For a Very Foolish Day

Supreme Excitement Reigns As National Holiday Arrives

Once again, dear countrymen, we salute you on this bright, rainy morning. The rain falls in torrents, but the sun is high in the sky, so cheer up. Hallow'en is just around the corner and hoop skirts are coming back in style! The lambs are gambling on the green, and the bad little grasshoppers are hunting for weeds to lie down under.

December is almost over, and the dawn is breaking up housekeeping. Coal is cheaper and The Wife of Bath is chaperoning Chanticleer and pertelope to Kernersville—and Bab-bie and Rachel are wearing red buttons on their slates to get their beauty sleep. School will be out in a minute, and the flagpole is wrestling with the snow storm.

Just the other day I saw somebody that asked me about you. He was chewing gum and flying a kite, as he rolled along in his Rolls-Royce.

Do you know who he was? He was very impressed when he saw you sleeping at the night club the other night.

WINNERS OF PASSES

The Secretary of State takes great pleasure in awarding the two annual passes to the following what-nots for their excellent work on the committee of chalk-gatherers. These girls began their work no less than five minutes ago and have continued successfully for the past two years. The passes are good for two weeks on the Kress's Limited from here to Walnut Cove.

The honored winners are Miss Pearl Button of the Additional Staff and Miss I. M. Sleepy of the Advertising Staff.
