

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"

Hockey originated in the ancient world. It may be an outgrowth of prehistoric man's process of getting food. At any rate it is endowed with primitive characteristics which have stuck to it through the ages of civilization. Modern players seem to agree that the "Pole" is a perfect weapon of warfare and sling it aloft threateningly.

Such an idea of "sticks" coincides perfectly with the conception portrayed on a relief of a hockey bully discovered in 1922 among the ruins of Ancient Athens. The only striking difference noted is the form of dress. Apparently the Athenian was not handicapped by a mode of clothing. For the doubters, the Library Bulletin Board is carrying a picture of this relief entitled "Athletes of the Ancient World."

Actress: "But it is the latest style; I paid $200 for it."

Stage Manager: "That may be true, but when your husband says, 'Woman, you are hiding something from me,' the audience can't figure out what he means."

TURKEY DINNER

On Thursday last our worthy heroine, Miss At, did go forth to battle on the local golf course and, to resort to the words of this flighty generation, did bring home the bacon—only in this case the meat was turkey. And then, on account of a nobleness of spirit which always is hers, she did declare that a mighty feast should be held in the Parva Dining Hall, at which banquet the renowned Consilium Athleticum should be chief among many.

The ancient town time piece having tolled the hour of six, the doors were thrown open, and the seats were shown to the guests around a table groaning with palate-pleasing foods, most eminent among which were waffles and turkey hash—a dish of great delicacy.

Our excellent hostess graced one end of the table, together with other noble facultates, Faculta Thompson and Faculta McAnally, charming young feminae who delighted the gathering with tales of their former conquests in athletics.

The honteous meal having been finished, one member betook it upon herself to arise and praise the feast cum laude. She said, in effect: "It is not even able to be compared with Eques Anderson's country supper."

YOO HOO SIT AND WAIT

1. Look over audience to see whose there and who isn't.
2. Make list of those absent.
3. In your mind review all to day's lessons.
4. If too bored, talk to girl next to you.
5. Decide what clothes you will wear next week-end.
6. Rehearse speeches you will say to each girls from whom you wish to borrow the clothes.
7. Turn through hymn-book and pick out favorite hymns.
8. Memorize eight or ten of them, it might help you.
9. Play the game of seeing if you can open the book to the page you have in mind. Don't cheat. It doesn't take as much time.
10. Decide where you will take your week-ends next year.

About this time you will hear Mary B. and Babe singing "Fairest Lord Jesus." After the third line the rest of the class join in and the suspense is over. And now, dear readers, may you never again squirm about restlessly while waiting for the seniors to come in chapel.

Preacher: "Brothers and sisters, I want you to be ready to jump when Gabriel blows his horn."

Maggie: "Has he got a car, too?"

Our idea of a restless spirit is the spirit of the Scotchman who bought a life-time pen and was killed as he left the store.
