CARLTON PALMER GIVES LECTURE AT WEDNESDAY CHAPEL

New York Collector Speaks On "The Joy of Pictures".

In expanded chapel last Wednesday one of the most interesting programs of the year was presented. Through the efforts of Miss Katherine Davis and the Art Department, Mr. Carlton Palmer made a talk on the joy of pictures. Mr. Palmer, who is a teacher, educator and collector in New York, illustrated his lecture with paintings from his own private collection. These he has been collecting from all parts of the world for the past twenty years, and all of them are originals.

In speaking of his life, Mr. Palmer told the following story. Thirty years ago there was a charming young girl who lived in Ghent. Her father and her uncles were painters, and every time the girl had a birthday or something special happened to her, the artists would celebrate the occasion by painting pictures for her. When she decided to marry a young Englishman and share his life in America, her family painted lovelier pictures than ever and sent them to America for her home in New York State. Into this home Mr. Palmer was born, and it is to his mother and the things she used to tell him about those paintings that he gives the credit for his present talent and art appreciation.

No picture, he said, is great because of its subject, but rather because of the way that subject is painted. No two artists would paint a scene in the same way, because they do not see it in the same way. A painting is an emotional interpretation of what the artist feels in the presence of nature. Therefore, a photograph does not represent nature as well as a painting because it lacks feeling.

Color pattern is one of the most enjoyable things in pictures. A good artist must give a certain amount of contrast, and yet he must also achieve uniformity and blending. Often it is not easy for the artist to express his feelings on canvas and he must try again and again before
