LOVE THE WILD SWAN

"I hate my verses, every line, every word,
Oh pale and brittle pencils ever to try
One glass-blade's curve, or the throat of one bird
That clings to twig, ruffled against white sky.
Oh cracked and twilight mirrors ever to catch
One color, one glinting flash, of the splendor of things.
Unlucky hunter, oh bullets of wax,
The lion beauty, the wild-swan wings, the storm of the wings."

—This wild swan of a world is no hunter's game. Better bullets than yours would miss the white breast, Better mirrors than yours would crack in the flame. Does it matter whether you hate your . . . self? At least Love your eyes that can see your mind that can Hear the music, the thunder of the wings.
Love the Wild Swan.

—Robinson Jeffers.

BECAUSE MY GRIEF SEEMS QUIET AND APART

Because my grief seems quiet and apart,
Think not for such a reason it is less.
True sorrow makes a silence in the heart,
Joy has its friends, but grief its loneliness.
The grief that tears too readily to confess,
Can mended be, by fortune or by art,
But there are woes no medicine can dress,
As there are wounds that from the spirit start.

So do not wonder that I do not weep,
Or say my anguish is too little shown.
There is a quiet here, there is a sleep,
There is a peace that I have made my own.
Man by himself goes down into the deep,
Certain and unbefriended and alone.

—Robert Nathan.

HERE AND THERE

Well, exams are over and we have heard the worst—or maybe the best. Let's hope that our good intentions to study this semester will last at least two weeks!

It seems that a few people had a good time during exam week. Virginia Lee was raving forth about the swell time she and Dick had playing around in Kinston.

Isn't that a cute car that Milly Troxler is driving this week! Guess whose it is? I think his name is Bob.

Kate Pratt is wearing a mighty pleased expression on her face. Have you noticed? She must be thinking of that Chi Psi house party down at "the hill."

Mary Woodruff danced to the divine music of Eddie Duchin up at W. and L. last week. Lucky Mary!

The teaching ability of several of the seniors was displayed at the dinner Thursday night. Incidentally the trustees make apt pupils.

Have you heard the new "Splinter" song? It's "I've got you under my skin." The new "Beauty Parlor" song is "I'm in the mud for love."

Garnelle Raney, a senior of last year, was here Monday. We certainly were glad to see her.

We are also glad to see "Aggie" Brown—Miss Brown to you—who graduated from Salem last year. She has been studying at Chapel Hill, but is now a new instructor in Sociology here.

Anna Leak Scott has been seen several nights—Sundays and Thursdays to be exact—with a certain young man from Lexington. He calls her on the telephone from Lexington to see if she is free for the evening.

Georgia Goodson looked mighty good at the concert the other night. Incidentally, she was with a new man. That little bow on Georgia's velvet hat sorta gets 'em, I think.

Well, I have to go curl my hair for the party Saturday night. Take care and don't trip over your train when going down the steps to the gym on the arm of your best beau.
