

SENIOR PLANS FOR SUMMER PLEASURES

(Continued From Page One) get all ready for her wedding. Helen Jones, Jo Klutz, Mary Ruth Elliott, Virginia (Crumpler, Eloise and Becky Baynes, Gladys Gibson, and Frieda Blumenthal are facing a summer with no definite plans as yet, but they are going to play around here, there, and everywhere to be ready for anything that comes along.

In something that we've found nowhere else on this campus and something that should be a huge lot of fun, B. C. Dunford plans to play around too — and he's really going to play around. He is all set to start his own dance band this year.

Has any group of fifty-seven seniors anywhere else a more diversified selection for summer vacations, or will their trips and fun cover any more of this world than that of fifty-seven Salem Seniors?

"What will your father say when he knows we're engaged."

"He'll be delighted! He always is."

A SENIOR LOOKS BACKWARD

(Continued From Page One) lights (now you see and now you don't), and smell of Mr. Bruner's sugar cake will have an affectionate niche in any Salemite's memory, largely because of the cheerful patience of Miss Siewers. The first time she got lost, her first meeting with Miss Lawrence and Miss Riggan, her first chapel, her first room mate, her first date at Salem, all these may be seen through the rosy mist of retrospection.

And the moral of this, my undergraduate friend, is to make hay while the sun shines, and make it in a hurry, for you too will soon be in the above pitiable state!
