

Jean Griffin Tells All: Is "Home-Loving Body"

by Peggy Sue Taylor

If she weren't such a "home-lovin' body," Jean Griffin would like to go into diplomatic work, but her present ambition consists solely of "getting that sheepskin". She admits to a desire to get married sometime in the dim, dark future, but would like to travel a bit before then. Language, history, music—all the fine arts interests Jean, a senior, born and bred in Rocky Mount.

Radio mystery stories, movies, dancing and ping-pong are some of Jean's leisure time activities. She has a great fondness for sport clothes, but (wonder of wonders), dislikes bridge intensely! In the summer, Jean heads for the beach. She can almost always be found around Morehead or Nagshead, her favorites in "places to go". Carolina gets her vote for the best place to spend a football week-end.

Jean has been active in many phases of college life while at Salem. At present she is a member of the French club, the I. R. S. Council, the A. A. Council, and the annual staff. She has been a member of the May Court her sophomore and junior years and was a Sights and Insights Feature Girl her freshman year. One of the most important offices Jean has held, however, was that of Chief Marshal, to which she was elected her junior year.

Bitting Burns Seniors Squirm

by Pinky Carlton

It wasn't Becky Beasley's red hot piano-playing that caused the fire in Bitting last Sunday afternoon. It was a pasteboard box of warm ashes placed near inflammable material in the furnace room.

Amie in her room smelled the smoke. Leaning back in her big easy chair, she said, "Someone must have struck a match in the basement."

Izzy sauntered into Fisher's room and casually remarked, "I believe this place is on fire". Fisher, Peggy Gray, and Spillman sniffed the air, decided that it was, and dashed out. Izzy, left alone, went back to her room. She dressed, combed her hair, and closed the door carefully behind her when she left. Remembering her cigarettes, she went back to her room once more and got them.

Susie Knight was there with her camera. She took a picture of bewildered, screaming Peggy Gray, who was in pajamas, housecoat, and fur coat, and was clutching a jewelry box. Susie also photographed Spillman wearing a nightgown and her "old coat"—"I couldn't decide whether to wear my new one or not."

Mr. Weinland was there. He was out walking with his cocker spaniel when he saw three fire trucks roar past him. He and his dog watched them interestedly until they noticed a strange thing; the fire trucks had turned in at Salem square. Throwing his faithful puppy into the arms of some nearby children, Mr. Weinland followed the fire. He almost beat the force getting there.

"Who saw it first" was the big question after the excitement and Peggy Gray calmed down. The heroine, formerly known merely as "Carothers", stepped forth and claimed her rightful place of glory.

"I was passing by and smelled smoke. When I investigated and found the fire, I called Miss Stout. She was sitting peacefully in her room, reading a book entitled The Teacher's Crisis. With the aid of a fire extinguisher, she and I put the fire out. Then the three fire trucks filled with eager firemen, and a bright red car, filled with the fire chief, came."

Later our own former fire chief, Kat Ballew, who had been studying in her room all afternoon, walked to Gooch's. Bombarded with questions, she replied, "What fire?" (She uses ear-stoppers.)
