Extension Art Courses Now Being Offered at Salem

Extension studio art courses for townspeople are being offered this semester at Salem College, with classes for adults and high school students.

Warren Brandt, associate professor of art, and Walter Barker, assistant in art, are in charge of instruction for the classes. Oil and watercolor painting, drawing from life and still life composition are being taught.

The class for adults meets Tuesdays from 7:30 to 10:00 p. m., and began October 4. Registration was held to 25 local people.

Among those taking the exten-tion courses are beginners, professional artists and advanced art students, it has been announced.

A morning laboratory course for young people is being held from 10:00 a. m. to noon each Saturday, and is limited to students from the sixth to the twelfth grades. The class is composed of two groups, the first covering grades six to eight, and the second including the ninth to the twelfth grades. The first meeting of the young people's class was October 1.

All class work is being held in the college laboratory, located on the third floor of South Hall.

Kate Pyron; Mr. Robert Leach; Mrs. Charles B. Merriman; and Miss Moran from the Academy.

twenty regular men students. Of this number only about fifteen spend much time on the campus.

It seems to me that any representation that we might get in the various functions can be only a formality. These affairs are of great interest to the girls only. Also, our representation could not mean anything unless we have more representatives than our numbers would seem to warrant. However, on this score, there are few of the men students who can give any extra time to student activities. All of us are, of course, day students who have activities in town which take their time, such as, part-time jobs, anxious wives, etc.

All of the men students will cooperate in every way to make a success of this experiment in co-education a success. I opposed the plan to share in the Student Government under the present circumstances. However, a majority of the men who voted on this matter expressed the desire to have a greater voice in student affairs. As a result, those of us who opposed the plan decided to do our part, and a little more, to make it be of value to all students.
