

Dot To Be Married Soon; Wedding Date Set For June

Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Massey of Kinston have announced the engagement of their daughter, Dorothy, to Mr. John Henry Kelley, son of Mrs. G. R. Kelley of Winston-Salem. John and Dot plan to be married the early part of June in St. Mary's Episcopal Church Kinston.

Our May Queen this year, Dot has been on the May Court for three years. She was a Feature Girl her freshman year, and a Marshal her junior year. At present, Dot is editor of Sights and Insights and a member of The Order of The Scorpion.

A graduate of The Citadel, John works for the Kelley Paper Company. The couple plan to make their home in Winston-Salem.

Leach Speaks

extreme poverty and sufferings of the people there, would have excellent results in raising American prestige and good will.

"These efforts would be evidences of our good intentions. The recent report of the American Friends Committee was accepted by both the State Department and the Russian Embassy. It provided: Renewal of trade between East and West; Germany to be united under United Nations; cultural exchange; and the building of World Government."

Professor Leach led a question and answer period at the end of his address.

Black Sea

(Continued from page seven) under water. The way the music is played, you can hear the bells of the cathedral still chiming as it sinks into the sea."

Hellen wasn't talking to me anymore; she was just remembering. But it was a sad kind of remembering.

"Does Max ever sing anymore?" I asked after a few minutes.

"No," she answered, "not really—Yes, he does. He sings with the rest of them now—the strength songs of a super-Germany—the glorious country rebuilt from ruin—"

"Oh," I didn't know what to say. The sea had turned dark blue and the brick houses were maroon. I could barely make out the shape of the lighthouse far out on the left of the bay; the leaves were black shapes.

"It's getting dark," I said. "Yes, we'd better go."

On the way back, Hellen talked of many things. She told me of an opera she had seen in Dresden. She told me of a time when Mama was little; how the two of them had sneaked out of the house one day and—

"Oh, we're home," she said, "and I haven't stopped talking."

"No, you didn't talk in the cemetery much," I reminded her.

"No," she said. "I didn't, did I?"

Hellen left a few days later. A year passed and we heard from Germany occasionally. Clothes were impossible to get; travel was difficult; food was rationed; everyone was under the control of the Nazis.

In the fall of 1939, war was declared. Months later Mama, Daddy, George and I came to America. We heard from Hellen indirectly. Max died. Hellen and Jane were in Turkey. Jane was grown. Hellen had a cerebral hemorrhage and was partially paralyzed. Hellen was coming to America.

I remember her walking in the front door of our house. She did not seem tall any more; her back was not quite so straight; she walked with a cane; there were lines around her mouth and on her forehead. But her hair was still black and she still looked like the Duchess of Windsor. She planned to get well, get a job and send for her daughter. "Just in that order," she said.

I never did have a long talk with her. Anyway, one doesn't go for walks after tea in an average, middle-sized town. She left after a few days for an operation in New York.

There is a cemetery not far from our house in America. It is on a flat plot of ground a hundred miles from the sea, and a well-traveled paved road leads to it. It is a well-kept cemetery with carefully planned paths between the graves. There are cut flowers on the graves. The tombstones are upright and neatly engraved. The trees are properly spaced on the trimmed grass.

The four of us do not go there often, only to put flowers on Hellen's grave.
