

Junior Class Seeks Gas En Masse

By Betty Parks

Word has been received from the Board of Trustees that gas pumps will soon be installed in the rear lawn of the school boiler room, and that the hockey field will be opened for parking effective April 23, 1951. It seems that the Junior class has created the need for these changes, due to the almost unanimous spirit of cooperation on the part of members in bringing cars back to school after Easter. To date there are seven cars on campus serving thirty-one girls, which, after considerable effort on the part of the author of this article in the field of long-division, comes to four and three-sevenths girls per car.

Of course, bringing the cars back to Salem for the first time necessitated a few unusual trips, as the occasion demanded. Jane Watson, Lola Dawson and Margaret Thomas had the longest journey, coming from Clearwater, Florida. Margaret was dressed for the occasion in a crumpled blue cotton dress streaked with orange juice. Jane somehow slammed the car door on the hem of her skirt and drove through Georgia in a rain storm before she discovered the layers of good wholesome mud she had collected on it.

Carolyn Harris and Winkie had an uneventful trip from Rocky Mount to Durham, but from there on things were a little different. They apparently charmed a car-load of boys who played pass-me-if-you-can. Carolyn, filled with the adventuresome spirit of our pioneer forefathers, took the short-cut through Graham, although she had never tried it before. They got here—enough said.

Jean Patton and Martha Wolfe had a pleasant trip over Fancy Gap Mountain at ten miles per hour in a thick fog. Jean redeemed herself on the last thirty-eight miles of the trip, however. She made it in thirty-nine minutes.

Emily Warden didn't have an exceptionally exciting trip from Roanoke. She drove by herself, because she couldn't find anyone else interesting enough to ride with her. Emily not only sang the whole way down, but composed her songs as well. Any girls possessing nerves of steel and immunity to car-sickness are invited to join her in afternoon drives.
